Smile and Keep Your Chin Up
 People who are depressed habitually frown, slump their shoulders and keep their chin down, forcing them to look and feel depressed. Their exterior appearance reinforces their inner feelings. Happy people are much more likely to smile and laugh, to have good posture and breathe life into their lives. There is substantial evidence that putting a smile on your face, breathing your chin up and keeping your overall body posture positive will make you feel better simply by sending signals to your brain that you are happy. If you don't believe this, try the experiment on yourself: spend a few minutes frowning, slump your shoulders and mope around and then smile and walk around energetically with good posture and keep your chin up. It's contagious. People will be happy to see you and will smile back at you. Finally, the view is far better with your chin up than with your chin down. So keep your chin up. It's the only way to keep your eyes on heaven.
 Light is sweet, and it is pleasant for the eyes to behold the sun.
 RSV Ecclesiastes 1:7
