Are You Having an Identity Crisis?
 Are you sometimes unclear about exactly who you are? If so, you are not alone. In fact, merely being human can for some seem like one long identity crisis. This is because our God-given freedom to live the life we choose means that we each must decide who we will be and understand that every stage of life is associated with its own inherent and distinct problems or issues. We may talk about "finding ourselves" or "discovering who we are," but in reality, this usually comes down to deciding who we want to be or who God wants us to be, and then trying to be that person. There may be an element of discovery in realizing what we want or what God wants for us. But even in that case we may not have a clear answer to those questions, and we may find it hard to want ourselves. Self-actualization is one of our highest and most important aspirations; we can choose to be good and godly people or we can settle for considerably less. God has given each of us "free will" to determine our own identity, and we can be whoever we want to be within reason of course, so we to not and hold onto what is good. We should love one another, work hard and serve the Lord with a heart full of devotion (Romans 12:9-11).

So be careful how you live. Don't live like ignorant people, but like wise people.
