Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Simmons returned Saturday from a trip to Toronto, where they attended the fair. They were accompanied by Mrs. Angeline Lapham and Mrs. Angie Hueston of Detroit.

The funeral of Mrs. Harley Johnson was held from the home on Thursday of last week. Death came as a relief as she had suffered intensely since last March. She is survived by her husband and two young sons.

Northville will have a lecture course of four entertainments this winter, the first of which will be the Maude Stevens Co. and I will be given October 3.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Simon disposed of their household goods at auction last Saturday and departed this week for Germany where they expect to reside. Edwin White has purchased their property here.

A very interesting ball game was held Tuesday between the business men of the north and south sides, Main street being the dividing line. Business places were closed during the afternoon and it certainly was a lot of fun for all. The score 22-15 in favor of the Northsiders.

Hugh Babbitt sustained a broken ankle last week when he was thrown from the rear platform of street car as it rounded a curve. The accident occurred in Plymouth.

Miss Jennie Hornbeck of Montreal is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Milford Baker.

Base Line

Noland Seeley and wife of Pontiac and Frank Tucker and James Scandless of Detroit were Sunday guests at the home of Mrs. Greer. Ben Dennis is much better.

E. Simmons made a business trip to Detroit Monday.

Harry and Stanley Simmons spent Sunday with their uncle, Frank Rice, at Novi.

Miss A. T. Rice is now spending an indefinite time with her son, Charles, at Lansing.

Mrs. Claude Safford is improving.

Marlin Simmons was absent from school Tuesday on account of sickness.

The Ladies' Union met with Mrs. Thayer last Thursday.

Mrs. J. Greer and daughters, Mable and Myrtle, spent a day last week in Pontiac.

Gilt Edge

Arthur Helm, Howard and Harvey Wagenschultz were Gilt Edge callers Sunday.

Mrs. R. J. Foster was in Detroit Friday.

Mildred Simmons is attending the Farmington high school.

Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Mead spent Sunday at the home of the latter's brother, George Joslyn, in Redford.

Miss Antoinette Hopper of Detroit spent Sunday with Mrs. Chas. Lute.

Mrs. Claude Simmons and two children spent a few days last week with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Phillips, at Elm.

Samuel Johnson visited in Farmington a few days this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bradsell of Detroit spent Sunday with the latter's aunt, Mrs. P. N. Everett.

Mrs. G. Benton of Detroit visited her sister, Mrs. Chas. Colby, a couple of days the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Lute of Plymouth are spending a few days with their son Charles at the home farm.

Ernest Young is ill.

A reunion of the Wagenschultz family was held Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wagenschultz. About 35 were present and all had a very enjoyable time.

Katheryn Simmons is visiting friends in Detroit for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Chilson of Farmington are moving into Mr. Hakes' house, lately vacated by Mr. King.

Chas. King of Detroit has been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Foster.

Conroy's Corners

The Mystic Workers will hold their September meeting at the home of Mrs. Artie Tibbits for supper on Friday, Sept. 13, two miles east of Stevens corners, on the D. U. R. Everybody cordially invited.

Max Sprenger spent Sunday in Detroit.

Mesdames Ed. and Omer Conroy spent a few days last week at Ann Arbor.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd White and daughter, Helen, of Southfield spent Sunday at Omer Conroy's.

Frank Shear spent Saturday afternoon at Redford.

Mrs. Densmore entertained her nephew from Detroit one day last week.

Redford

Milton Oakman, the Republican nominee for sheriff, was one of the visitors at the Come-All-Ye and seemed to enjoy the show to the utmost. However on the way home the automobile in which he was riding collided with a truck and he and Henry Wobrock, his companion, were both slightly injured.

On Come All Ye day C. B. Andrews drove around with his automobile and took Thomas Johnson out for a ride about town. Mr. Johnson's condition is such that he is not able to walk over town and the kindness of his neighbor and friend was fully appreciated.

Wm. Becker of Pontiac, a former Redford, was one of the visitors at the Come-All-Ye and met many old friends who were very much pleased to shake hands with him again.

Rev. and Mrs. Geo. P. Davey were among the Come-All-Ye visitors and also attended the dedication services of the new M. E. church.

R. B. Northrop is grading his lot about his new bungalow on Grand River avenue.

E. J. Knowles has one house completed, the second one nearly finished and has a good start made on the third, all on North Lahser avenue.

The game that was planned for Tuesday of this week between the Redford business men and the probate court team of Detroit has been postponed until next Tuesday as the visitors could not all get together on the first named day. Of course, they feel the need of coming in full strength, notwithstanding they won the last battle.

VIVIAN'S PLAYMATE

BY BELLE MANIATES

Vivian's keen sense told her that the first signs of lost illusions were visible in her liege lord. He had become used to her beauty and his pride in possession. He was naturally cold and cynical, and her girl-like, affectionate nature had made the first impression on his impassivity. In the usual course of affairs a coldness, she concluded, would naturally increase. Her keen insight showed her where the trouble lay. She had been too easily won—too anxious to please him. She should make him jealous.

Finally she decided to have an imaginary absent lover. Then she would not harm anyone else—or herself.

Her husband, coming into the sitting room one afternoon, found her looking tenderly at an object she held in her hand.

"I have been looking," she said, with a flush for her deception, "at some of my girlhood keepsakes."

His indifference was stirred. "Oh, then that was a picture of an old sweetheart you were gazing upon?"

"Well, I suppose you might call

Looking Tenderly at an Object She Held in Her Hand.

him that," she replied, with a reminiscent smile and deprecating manner. "He lived across the street from us when we were children, and we grew up together. He was two years older than I, but he was nice and protecting to me."

"Well," he asked sarcastically, as she paused, "what became of him?"

"We went to school together. Then he went to college. I went abroad, and—well, you know how people come and go in your life."

"And you told me," he blurted, "that I was the first."

"How foolish I was," she thought, "to have told him anything like that. But there are many things a woman can't learn until she has been married."

"Oh," she said aloud. "A boy and girl affair. Valentines and all that silliness, you know—hardly counts as a love affair."

"What's his name?" he demanded.

Her quondam sweetheart was rapidly assuming tangible proportions. She had no idea he would "bite" so quickly and easily. She ran over in her memory the scores of boys whom she had known in the way she mentioned. She had said that he lived across the street, though. With the delightful inconsistency of her sex she strove to adhere as nearly as possible to the truth while in the webs of deceit. She who had lived on the opposite side of the street.

"Harry Walters," she said, lingering tenderly on the name.

"Show me the picture you were mooning over when I came in. I should like to see what your young fancy chose?"

She opened the drawer and selected a picture of a cousin, a youth of eighteen, who lived in the far west.

"This is he, Harry," she said, finding a loophole for her conscience in the recollection that her cousin's name was Harry.

He scowled at the delicate features and threw the picture down vindictively.

"It strikes me," he said, with an air of cold displeasure, "that you are rather sentimental for a married woman."

She laughed lightly. "Well, Hugh, why not? But it is time to dress. We dine at Mrs. Gordon's tonight, you know."

"Who will be there?"

"The Langdons, Maude Wilbur, Arthur Beauchamp and some others. It is given for a girl from Los Angeles who is visiting the Gordons."

The last arrival at the dinner was a stalwart, well-set-up man, whom the hostess finally brought to Vivian as she stood talking to the guest of honor—Maude Nelson.

"Harry," said Mrs. Gordon sweetly, "I want you particularly to know Mrs. Avery. Mr. Walters, Vivian."

Vivian blushed with pleasure. "Oh!" she cried excitedly. "I am sure—yes, you are the Harry Walters who lived across the street from us in Fostoria."

"And you are Vivian Allen. You haven't changed in the least."

"I am so glad I arranged for you to go in to dinner together!" exclaimed Mrs. Gordon.

"Hugh," called Vivian to her husband, who stood near by with an inscrutable expression on his face, "come here. I want you to meet Mr. Walters. Such a coincidence! I was telling you about him this afternoon."

Hugh coldly acknowledged the introduction.

"I should hardly know you from the picture of you that my wife treasures," he remarked.

Vivian felt Mrs. Gordon's surprise, as well as that of Miss Nelson. She did not dare look at Harry Walters until she heard him say:

"Oh, did you keep that photograph all this time? I hope I have changed in appearance since that time."

She was very grateful to him, and turning a look at him, an idea came to her which made her eyes dance. Her husband, with Miss Nelson, sat opposite her and her "schoolboy sweetheart" at dinner. Vivian racked her brain for reminiscences. Finding none (for of all the boys who attended the academy when she did, she had known him the least), she originated several. To her delight and amusement, he not only responded eagerly, but followed up her lead with much more thrilling memories.

"You did not answer the letter I wrote you when you were in Italy," he said, reproachfully.

"Indeed, I did," she replied earnestly, "but long, long afterward I learned that the train to Cherbourg had burned."

"Oh!" he said, his eyes full of regret.

As he became more attentive and impressive in manner, and she caught the jealous glances of her husband, Vivian's spirits soared, and she never seemed more beautiful.

Later in the evening, in the conservatory, she looked at Harry suddenly and laughed.

"What a vivid imagination you have, Mr. Walters!"

"It was awfully good of you, Mrs. Avery, not to give me away. I am going to confess to you, my old neighbor, the object of my fairy tales."

"You needn't," said Vivian, with a smile. "I think I can guess. May I?"

"You may; but I don't see how."

"Mrs. Gordon had confided to me on my arrival that you were engaged to Miss Nelson, and I divined from her expression when you came that you and she had had a misunderstanding, and you were trying to make her jealous."

"Mrs. Avery, you must have second sight! But it was awfully sweet of you to help me out."

"Fellow feeling," quoted Vivian to herself.

Looking up, she saw her husband standing before her.

"Vivian," he said in a tone trembling with feeling, "this is our dance."

He led her away from the astonished Walters and in the ballroom he caught her almost roughly to him, as they began the waltz.

"Tell me, did you know he was to be here?" he asked fiercely.

She looked up with frank eyes in which shone the gladness of love regained, and said with the earnestness of truth.

"I never dreamed of such a thing. It was just a coincidence."
