

CHURCHES AGAIN HAVE UNION PRAYER MEETING Well pleased with the response to the union prayer meeting program inaugurated recently by three Farmington churches, pastors of the three congregations decided to repeat the program, and union prayer meetings are being held again this week.

The churches participating are the Salem, Evangelical Church, Methodist Church, and the Baptist Church. The pastor of each is leading in a church other than his own.

"WHOLE-SOME" —and then some! "Say, don't take such a big bite—ree-leave some for me." That's the way little sister feels about it when the last slice of "BAKER BOY" BREAD is to be divided. The answer—always have enough on hand to give to the children their fill.

BEAUTY CULTURE In All Its Phases

A Little Thing Like Clothes By JESSIE DOUGLAS (Continued) "TALK" said Tom Winship, kneeling on the carpet, "is the prettiest girl in town."

"If you give me a dead in love with me that anyone could see it," Arthur Baldwin offered. "You're lost already, and I'll put you on it, all right."

Daisy Miller's heart beat very fast as she washed the dinner dishes. She had really not seen anything of Arthur Baldwin since the night she left school together; she had thought less of him, and yet tonight he had telephoned to ask if he could come to see her.

"I am glad to see you, Daisy," he said, scrutinizing her white face. "There was an awkward silence for a moment after he had seated himself in the comfortable living room in the big chair across from Mr. Miller."

"How're you getting on with your law?" said Mr. Miller, gazing at Arthur Baldwin found himself in the clutches of that inveterate old talker, and he listened, in a drowsy reminiscence of the '30s, while he fingered in his chair.

"When I had the suit made," he admitted, "it was one of the dullest evenings he had ever spent and quite unsuccessful except for his best remark to Daisy."

"You certainly have wonderful hair, Daisy," he said as he took her hand under the whitening gas flame in the hall. "He smirked to himself as he remembered the show, almost a blush, the touch of the moment she said, 'It's not enough to know better, Daisy thought next morning she scanned the paper; but a low infection in the air had caught her and she explained to her father that she was going to the city."

"It must have been the hair that did it, but Daisy was unable to resist a bit that looked altogether striking in one of the smartest shops on Fifth avenue. But the hat made her still look even older, that ever; and Daisy plunged. She gazed when she saw herself in the new suit with its long, slim lines and its delicious color her father, with the bewitching hat. But how shabby her shoes looked. As a very last touch she bought herself a new pair. "It'll take me years to save it all again," Daisy thought sadly. "All the money that I put by for a rainy day."

Great Minds Attuned to Nature's Temples There is a sincerity in nature, and in the free out of doors, things really are most often what they seem, despite the fact that the human mind is so deceptive of distance occasioned by atmospheric clarity. The artificial needs a particular setting. The sunshine and the stars and the blue sky are of the same order. The groves were Divinity's first temples because they were and remain the most fitting temples in which the Universal Spirit may be worshipped. In the groves, on the mountainsides, by the water, the sense of the sea and peace and repose—the something which appeals directly to the soul. There is there nothing of the garish, nothing of the vulgar, nothing of the trivial and small, no distracting roughness of harmony to hold us to the commonplace experiences of life.

So Socrates went speaking to the sea, as did the vanguard Milton when he called his land of melody, as did Goldsmith and Walt Whitman and many another who got close to the heart of the Spirit of Nature. So Josias—Man of the open spaces—spoke from the mountain and the field and froth under the trees; by the brookside, and where the murmur of the sea waves filled the mind and the soul with thoughts of harmony—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Early Friction Match of Primitive Design The "Portable Fire Box" as it was called, was one of the earliest forms of "instantaneous heater" that was invented in Italy in 1788. Similar to it was the "Promethean Match," patented by Samuel Jones, an Englishman, in 1828. A minute quantity of sulphuric acid sealed in a tiny glass vessel surrounded by a compound of chlorate of potash, was inclosed in a paper spill. When the glass vessel was broken, either by the hammer supplied with the "match" or with the teeth, the acid fell among the potash and ignited the paper. Despite the many claimants, the honor of inventing the first real "friction match" of the kind which which are familiar today belongs to John Walker, a Stockton-on-Tess chemist. In 1826 he was selling his friction lights for a shilling for a hundred, and trepence for the box. The match was pressed between the fingers in a piece of sandpaper.

Listen to Grow! If you wish to try an unusual experience find a clump of catalpa on the first really warm day of spring, when the trees are leafless, the ground bare and the summer hovers between 70 and 80. Then stand safely and listen to it grow. You will soon hear a sharp click among this hardy, tall-plumed plant that grows on lawns in all parts of the country. It will sound as loud as a snap of your fingers. New shoots are trying to push between the stalks of last year, and the flinty hardness of the dead cuttings holds them back. Youth will not be denied. The most curious thing about the new shoots between the stalks of the old ones, expanding quickly in the spring sunshine. The strain increases until the old wood gives way with a snap—Nature Magazine.

New Yellowstone Geyser Many people are in the habit of regarding geysers as stable institutions like mountains and lakes. But such is not the case. Geysers come and go with little notice. This is proved by the fact that recently one of the largest geysers in the world opened up in Yellowstone National park. Twice a day the new geyser spouts a terrific stream of water about 75 feet high and continues for three hours. Its crater is 100 feet wide, 120 long, and 8 deep. It is near the famous Excelsior geyser which ceased to spout in 1888.

Must Be Right to Endure I am not discouraged. Things will fight themselves. The pendulum swings one way and then another. But the steady pull of gravitation is toward the center of the earth. Any structure must be plumb if it is to endure, and the building will fall. So it is with nations. Wrong may seem to triumph. Right may seem to be defeated. But the gravitation of eternal justice is toward the Throne of God. Any political institution which is to endure must be plumb with the line of justice. From the last speech of John P. Altgeld.

Too Late Cecil's mother made it a rule that if he came to the dinner table late he was not to speak during the meal. The other day, as soon as he entered the room, he began, "I say, mother," but his mother quickly reminded him of the rule. "But, mother," he persisted. "Not a word," said the stern parent. When dinner was over, his mother asked what he wanted to say. "Oh, I only wanted to say baby was giving father's socks with unlensed milk."

One More Letter "Have you got those letters stamped and ready to go?" asked dad as he pulled on one coat sleeve in the morning. "Yes, here you are." The letters were given to him and he headed for the door to go when he was stopped by a command from his wee daughter. "Walt, daddy," she piped, "here's a letter I addressed."
