The length of our lives seems to be determined argely by opp heredity, since those who come from families that, tend to live long also tend to live long. Our environment undoubtedly plays a part, since deaths from accident, congestion of popularition, speed of civilization and infection must be but under environment factoristication for animals indicated that the third important factor is the amount and nature of food intake.

In order to prove the effects of nutrition, Drs. H. C. Sherman and H. L. Campbell fell 400 rats of approimately the same heredity and living unler conditions alike in all other respects on two different diets. The diets were adequate in both instances, except that one contained a higher proportion of smilk than did the other. The animals of the entire with the diets of the contained and th
