"TRIAL OF MARY DUGAN" FAMOUS MELODRAMA TO BE PLAYED AT SHUBERT

Atmosphere plays an important part in the production of "The Trial of Mary Dugan," the world-famous melodrama coming to the Shubert Detroit Opera House Sunday night, February 17th. Upon entering the theatre the audience finds the curtain up and the stage set to represent the Supreme Court of New York. For fifteen minutes numerous characters stroll on and off the scene. Scrub women dust the furniture, police officers sit about reading papers, court attendants make their entrances and exits, exchanging gossip and comment pertaining to the trial. Presently the witnesses appear, followed by spectators who wrangle for the best seats. The district attorney bustles through a rear door and makes sure that his assistants have all his papers in order. With the appearance of the judge, court convenes, and a moment later, Mary Dugan, timid, frightened defendant, is led through an iron cage to a seat at her attorney's table. An Italian girl is sentenced to die for the murder of her lover, and as she is dragged screaming from the court room, the trial of Mary Dugan begins. By this time, the audience, who acts as the jury, is thoroughly imbued with atmosphere of the court room.

But the attention to detail does not end here. The "acts" of the play are spaced by adjournments, and when it is time for the trial to be resumed, court attendants in uniform go out into the lobbies and bid the "jurors" to resume their seats.

During the second intermission, there is a bit of atmosphere that never fails to win its round of laughter and applause. A sleepy old spectator awakes to find himself alone in the courtroom. In ket.

stead of going out with the others he calmly seats himself at the lawyers' table and eats a ham

In Lincoln's Time

Safe Places for Money Were Rare

When Lincoln was splitting rails, prudent folk kept their money in their socks or under the floor. But that was a century ago.

Today banks such as this offer a safe place for keeping your funds, PLUS the interest of 4 per cent, which makes the savings grow. The Lincolns of tomorrow are saving today.
