

Praising a Woman

By AD SCHUSTER

YOUNG PLATT WARRING had come to Hollywood confident that his looks, his ability to ride, and the many amazing tricks he had learned would secure his immediate entrance into the ranks of motion picture stars. He had even pictured himself as the cause of a spirited quarrel, one director bidding over another for his services. There had been months of waiting and then he had been offered a part as one in a crowd.

"It's a hard game," he decided, "and a fellow has gotta be ready to start in at the bottom." In turn he was Indian, Roman, soldier, cook, and tumbler. The super studied the principals and learned. When the chance came he would show them he was as good as any. In the meantime his rent was due and he needed a job.

In the restaurant which he frequented because of the chance to meet the man who could help, he took a seat near the window where he could watch the cars of the successful gliding by.

"Look at them," he said to himself. "There they are as if they owned the earth and not one in ten does anything but imitate the director." He thought of his long struggle and his early ambitions, "oh, gosh, why, can't I get my chance?"

He had a movie star, a movie motor.

The question from a young and exceedingly innocent appearing girl who had taken the seat opposite him brought him out of his thoughts. He read easy in her eyes and admiration, how she felt and was young and vain enough to know, too, the pleasure of being mistaken for a celebrity. It was a new experience and one he was not going to lose. Platt Warring, the young and ambitious, had his eyes on the girl and the producer or the teacher who drew their minds with knowledge.

The way to acquire knowledge is to keep an open mind so that different angles of thought may present themselves for your information. That is the basis of sound judgment—Successful Farming.

Renting System Old

We don't know what the first paid. It is said that when the German conquerors parts of Gaul, the land was parceled out to oldies, lieutenants and private soldiers. In return the holders of the lands promised military service when needed. Some of the land was given to favorites who were allowed to pay in money instead of service, and the system was established. Rent was certainly known in the days that Rome flourished, there being Latin names for rent under long leasedhold tenure: genus of a farm, genus of a house, genus of the annual rent payable for the right to the perpetual enjoyment of anything built on the surface of the land—Washington Star.

This was the first recognition of his career! With it came reaction and Platt Warring expanded beyond all proportions. He told the world pictures were made of the man and women who made them and vastly the minds of the famous folk from his tongue.

"Wonderful," she said, "and you know them all! Could you tell me, perhaps, of Elsa Meader, and if she might help me to get a chance to act?"

The grand pose was threatened. Platt Warring looked at the girl with pity. He should have known she was no tourist, but one more of the thousands in a movie which he had seen, but all the same.

"Oh, a cowboy?" she drew out. "Do you mind if I put that about two-and-a-half. I'm tremendously interested you know and, would, would you give your name?" in my book, that is, if it isn't asking too much?"

"But you," said the girl, "had all of your prominence, yet could help me?"

The super winced. His hour of glory was over and he was ashamed of the way he had played with the girl's innocent admiration.

"Listen, I'm only a stranger like hundreds—like you will be, if you're like most of us. You're lucky in getting a girl like Elsa Meader, please?"

In the office of the large companies Miss Elsa Meader gave orders which she knew would be obeyed.

"Find a place, please," she said, referring to a notebook, "for a man named Platt. Warring. I played the innocent country girl in a restaurant today, and made his acquaintance. He's a real son and I'd like to see him go to a chisel."

And that Platt received the notice to report on the lot he dined a jingle and sang. "It worked! It worked! The innocent kid had me fooled for 30 white but as soon as I recognized he played my part as it should be played. There's nothing like praising a woman to her face. It is a scheme that never fails."

Development of Watch

Out of the experience with "strange eggs" as a field agent, he had collected and various devices for keeping time. It was not until the Eighteenth century that the watch as we know it today was designed. Thomas Tompion, who died in 1713, invented the first dead-beat escapement for watches. George Graham improved on the principle, and Pierre le Roy managed to overcome the gain or loss of time caused by the contraction or expansion of the metal spring.

Recovering a place, please," she said, referring to this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Probate Court of the County of Oakland, to be read, printed and circulated in said County:
