NOTICE

On March 11, Donald Pound asked if Clarence Utley was at home. He was at the barn. In about ten minutes a fire appeared near Pound's box. I had not been near the bees in weeks. I joined the Y. P. L. U. and the Grange, had to be the best of character to join gentlemen and ladies. —Clarence Utley.

John Lathrup's 'Item' Became A Big 'Story' hands. Then one produced a blackjack.

"You don't need to hit me with that," Mr. Lathrup says he told them. "I'm 74 years old. I'm not going to give you any trouble. You can take what money I've got."

He raised his arms level with his shoulders, and a blow was struck at his head, glancing off upon his forehead. Then he was ordered to turn with his face to the wall.

"No, I'd just as soon you'd shoot me as hit me in the back of the head with that thing," said Mr. Lathrup. "I won't turn around that way."

The next order was that he lie on the floor, face down. "No," said Mr. Lathrup, "I won't lie down, because I know I'd never get up."

One bandit stepped up and took a wallet from Mr. Lathrup's trousers pocket on the left side. He searched the right hip pocket but overlooked the right side pocket, in which was about $100. "I'll get some rope and tie you," said one bandit. "No, you don't need to tie me," answered Mr. Lathrup. "I'm not going to bother you." They left, warning him not to leave the basement for two hours.

"I ran out of the basement after them," said Mr. Lathrup. "I seem to have forgotten completely that they had me covered. They went in such a hurry that they drove across a big ditch, instead of the driveway, but I couldn't follow them. Their car was too fast, I knew." After leaving the inn, the trio stopped at the Smith gasoline station on Base Line road east of Farmington road filling up the gas tank. Mr. Lathrup hurried to Farmington and notified Deputy Lee Doyle.

Mr. Lathrup said Thursday that he had deposited a fairly large sum of money in a Farmington bank just a short time before the holdup.

A guest may be as glad to go as the host is to have him go.

Truth may be eclipsed, but it can not be extinguished.
