Flying Animals Abound in Borneo, Says Beebe

One of the favorite methods of locomotion of the animals of Borneo is flying, according to William Beebe, the well-known naturalist, in an article in Liberty. "Borneo is a land of flying creatures," he writes, "and besides birds, bats and insects, I saw squirrels, lizards, frogs, and even snakes occasionally trusting themselves to the thin air, buoying themselves, or at least breaking their fall, with parachutes or membranes of fur, skin or scales. "One of the most interesting and beautiful," Beebe continues, "is a large furry creature, somewhat squirrel-like in general appearance, which has, unfortunately, no correct common name. It is known usually as the flying lemur, but this is no more applicable than the literal translation of its scientific name—the flying weasel-monkey—for it is neither the one nor the other of these animals, but rather a distant cousin of moles and shrews."

Soldiers' Bones Used to Fertilize Fields

An historic note of almost a century ago that throws an interesting sidelight on the use of dead soldiers in German fertilizer factories has been unearthed by Prof. Paul B. Sears of the University of Nebraska.

In looking over the second annual report of the geological survey of Ohio, dated 1838, he encountered the following statement by Prof. W. W. Mather:

"Europe and Africa send wheat to our Eastern markets and at the same time send out orders for our refuse bones, bone earth of sugar refiners, comb factories, etc. Many of the bones of the battleground of Waterloo and from the bone caves of Germany and Italy, have been transported to England and France to supply a material which has become deficient in their soils."

Filter for Radium Rays

Five years ago the women of America bestowed upon Mme. Curie, discoverer of radium, a gift of one twenty-eighth of an ounce of the precious element, worth $100,000. Today the gift has been turned into profit for all the world, for workers in Mme. Curie's laboratory in Paris now have found a way to prevent injury to the flesh of a patient during radium treatment.

The method, reports Popular Science Monthly, is to wrap the radium tube in a sheath of dense metal, such as platinum, and many layers of gauze, providing a filter for the rays that are needed.

Possum Visited City

A large opossum caused considerable excitement in the business section of Dallas, Texas. The animal ambled across Elm street when the traffic signal was against movement the way he was going. Patrolman Pinkerton started in pursuit. The animal tunneled into the lobby of a theater, but the doorman refused to let it pass without a ticket. Between the policeman and the doorman the animal was caught and was taken to the fire department headquarters, only to escape later in the night.
