STORE-ROOM TURNED INTO INVITING PLACE

The truth of "It's not what we have, but what we make it" was demonstrated during the past week by Thomas James, proprietor of the Boston Shoe Repair Shop, who was forced to move to a new location by the old building being torn down.

Mr. James rented what had been for years a store-room in the E. C. Grace store building, and the transformation began. Two large new windows gave the first requisite, added light. Thorough cleaning, well-planned carpenter work, electric wiring, and a liberal supply of paint has turned the interior into a most inviting place, and a wicker furniture set in which customers may rest while waiting for their shoes completed the job.
