Get behind the wheel and know the joy of driving this great car

The joy of driving the new Ford comes not alone from its speed—its safety—its comfort—its reliability—the pride you take in its beauty of line and color—but also from the pleasure it puts into motoring.

Instantly you start away for your first ride, you have a feeling that here is an unusually capable and alert car. That here is a car fully equal to every need and emergency. That here is a car with eagerness to go. An aliveness, a responsiveness in traffic on hills, and on the open road, that puts it in a class by itself.

Come in—take the wheel of a new Ford—and you'll want one for yourself every day.

DETROIT EDISON MAKES ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW ELECTRIC COOK STOVE

Announcement is made by The Detroit Edison Company of the development of an electric cooking stove of a revolutionary type. The new range is the result of months of study, experimentation and research under the auspices of Detroit Edison, devoted to producing an electric stove that would be swift in action, simple to operate, and economical in fuel cost, and that could be manufactured by mass production methods at a price much below that hitherto deemed possible for electric stoves of comparable size and finish.

The reason for undertaking the development of a new type of electric stove, according to Alex Dow, president of Detroit Edison, "was the inability of our company and others to obtain in any other way a low cost and rapid cooking electric machine." His specifications to the designer, Warren Noble of Detroit, were to the effect that the machine "should be easy to clean, simple to operate, and cook, and of such construction that it could be made in quantities at a price that would be attractive and economically possible for a large number of electric light and power customers."

Radical departures are made in heating element design, chief of which is the application of radiant heat. The range uses both reflection and convection from a high speed cooking element. Four electric cones are used for the cooking table. They are placed in the center of a heavy chromium plated steel reflector and become hot almost instantly, since they are above average heating capacity. The reflectors concentrate all the heat on the food to be cooked. The cones, which are identical in size and construction, can be removed for cleaning or renewal much in the same manner as an electric lamp.

The oven is so designed that it comes to a cooking temperature in less than five minutes, an improvement of some 300 per cent over other electric ovens. The stove uses less energy than any other ranges tested with it. Its table elements are 15 to 30 per cent faster and its ovens cook in approximately two-thirds the time.

Mass production methods similar to those employed in Detroit automobile plants will be used in its manufacture.

The new stove is expected to bring electricity into direct competition in economy and efficiency with other fuels for domestic cooking.
