Forestry in Michigan has reached the point where sufficient public opinion has been formed to justify the existing stringent laws governing the use and protection of timber tracts, but the regulations of this state do not approach those of Europe where in past years a man's life was an occasion forfeited for seemingly minor infraction of forest laws.

The Conservation Commission at its August meeting withdrew 410 of state owned lands from the sale, and set them aside for state park purposes.

STATE PARK VISITORS
MAY TOTAL 5 MILLIONS

Five million or more people will have visited the State parks this season, with practically every state in the Union represented, if the consistent increase in attendance since 1925 can be depended upon, is the opinion of P. J. Hoffmaster, superintendent of parks.

In 1925, four years after the state parks were placed under the control of the conservation department, there were 52 parks covering a total of 7655 acres. That year two and one-half million people from 46 states visited the wilderness scenery enclosed in the state parks for a stay of from a few hours to several weeks. Evidently those visitors spread the news of Michigan parks, because next year—three and one-half million came.

This is one of a series of sculptural masterpieces appearing on the tomb of the Compagnie, Statilena (Genova) in Genoa, Italy.

A masterpiece of masterwork of perfect modeling and the soft expression of grief. The angel, standing the urn holds a trumpet ready to sound it on the last day of Judgment.

Refrigeration SAFEGUARDS HEALTH

Your health deserves this protection

The importance of keeping food wholesome is recognized by doctors and health authorities everywhere. There is only one way to safeguard perishable foods—and that is artificial refrigeration, the year around.

A constant, uniform cold prevents spoilage. It is safe, reliable, sure. Here is the reason why most quick-spoiling foods are protected—from the time they leave the producer's hands until they reach your kitchen—by means of refrigerator cars, cold storage, and dealers' display cases. It is the only satisfactory way of maintaining a temperature always below 50 degrees. Above that point, harmful bacteria multiply with an amazing rapidity. Some method of refrigeration is absolutely necessary, winter and summer—the year around.

Use ice, if you wish, for refrigeration; or enjoy the convenience and security of automatic electric refrigeration. But use refrigeration! Do not depend on insanitary window boxes or backporch make-shifts to guard the health of your family. It is costly economy. Adequate artificial refrigeration is the only method that will insure proper protection.
