POULTRY RAISERS ARE WARNED AGAINST AGENT

Michigan poultrymen are warned by the poultry department at Michigan State College that at least one man has defrauded State farmers by selling them a medicine supposed to cure almost every disease which affects poultry.

The salesman claimed to represent Michigan State College when he sold the remedy to one poultry raiser in St. Clair county. At other points in the State, he has posed as the representative of the Michigan Poultry Laboratory.

A sample of the remedy, when analyzed at the College, contained reground bran or middlings, wood charcoal, quassa, limestone, salt, and Epsom salts. None of these ingredients have a marked remedial effect upon diseases of poultry and any of them can be purchased at local stores if they are wanted.

College poultry specialists advise flock owners to call the local veterinarian, the county agricultural agent, or the College department before investing money in poultry remedies sold by strangers.

STATE RECORDS FALL IN PULLING CONTEST

The State record in horse pulling contests for both heavy-weight and lightweight teams has been broken several times in the contests held at 15 county fairs which were supervised by members of the animal husbandry department at Michigan State College.

The record is held by the team owned by J. F. Gohr, Lansing, which pulled 3,325 pounds.

Better business is built easier when encouraged in the right way by the right kind of advertising.

CONFIDENCE IS BASIS OF HUMAN RELATIONS

B. T. Butterworth, advertising manager of the New York Times, says:

All human relationships are founded on confidence. Business is conducted on credit, which is simply another word for confidence. Religion is built on faith, that is to say, confidence. Advertised commodities are purchased because the public has come to believe in the merit of the goods and the integrity of the maker—confidence, again.

The most successful advertisers of today are those who have labored from the beginning to be worthy of the confidence of the buying public and who have kept faith with that public.

The newspapers that are the most successful are those which have earned the loyalty and confidence of their readers by fairness, accuracy and impartiality in their news columns and by publishing only trustworthy announcements in their advertising columns.

The censorship of advertising has done as much for the progress of newspapers and advertising as a business as any one force in present-day business. And not the least of the benefits of the censorship of advertising is the confidence which the more far-seeing newspapers have built up among their readers is shared in a dollar-and-cents way by their advertisers.
