The AMATEUR

A Tale of Love and Jealousy

"Oh! I shall show you that my ambition to become an actor is a just one. I tell you, girl, I know he spoke with conviction, 'that I have talent.'"

"My amateur!" she stroked his hand lovingly. "I shall be very proud of your success. In fact, I am always proud of you." She looked with adoration upon his dark, handsome face. "I wish I could do something to help you." She smiled wistfully. "But if thinking success can bring it, it's yours already."

"You dear, winsome girl!" He rose and drew her to him. "I'm lucky to have your love, and as soon as I become a real actor we can be married."

"I'm glad!" For a minute she rested her head on his shoulder, nestling close.

"I'm afraid I shan't be able to see you again until the night of the play." He held her at arm's length.

"You understand, don't you? We rehearse every evening, and of course I can't give up at the office yet, so my days are also full. But I won't love you any less because I don't see you. You believe that?"

"Yes," she nodded, "but I shall miss you."

"Two weeks will pass quickly, and I shall send you a box for the performance. . . . It's only right," he added, proudly, "that the fiancée of the star should be conspicuous."

"Good luck to the amateur!" she laughed happily, kissing him good night.

After the amateur had gone the girl sat thinking, trying to find some way to help him.

"I have it!" she exclaimed. "The man can do something. I will ask him to accompany me to the play. He and I will go alone, as no one else, not even father, could understand my nervousness during his performance."

Before returning the girl wrote a note to the man, telling him what she wanted him to do for the amateur for her sake. . . . The man received and answered the note the following day, accepting the invitation.

As the man's car drew up to the entrance of the theater the girl laid a trembling hand on his arm.

"Suppose he should not make good?" Her voice quivered. Then, "you—"

"Dear girl," the man spoke reassuringly, "I will make full allowances for the amateur, because you love him so dearly."

The curtain was up when they took their seats in the left stage box. The amateur was on, but didn't see them, as his back was toward the box.

It was not until the big scene in the second act that the amateur was able to look for the girl. . . . He had the center, and for a moment his glance wandered over the footlights, then rested upon the left box, where, sitting well forward and close to the man, whose arm encircled her chair, was the girl. . . . All the pent-up love of her nature was in her eyes when they met his, but looking swiftly from her, he caught the man's eye, and a sudden spasm of jealousy shot through him.

There he was working with all his strength to win success for her, he thought, viciously, "and she sat calmly by, not reveling in his triumph, but obviously enjoying the companionship of another man, and a handsome one at that!"

hate him!" And unconscious of his part he tore wildly across the stage, until when quite close to the box his cue came. He gasped, stuttered, but his mind was a blank; all thought of lines had gone. He stared helplessly at the girl, and in the surge of his emotions even the voice of the prompter was drowned.

The leading lady came to his assistance as best she could, but his climax was pitifully weak and the denouement a hopeless failure.

At the fall of the curtain the girl turned to the man with tears in her eyes, and a half sob escaped when she tried to speak.

He wrapped her cloak about her, and in the rush of conversation they slipped out unnoticed.

She cried softly all the way home, and it was not until she was saying a good night that she had the courage to ask the man what he thought of the amateur's work.

"I thought in the first act he had some of the 'stuff' in him, but—well, he lacks control, and I don't believe he can ever be anything but an amateur. I'm sorry, for your sake."

Shortly after the departure of the man the amateur arrived.

He came as one ashamed, hesitating on the threshold; then with a trace of his old pride, he suddenly took her in his arms.

Gently she pushed him from her. "Why did you fail?" she asked.

"Because," he answered simply, "I was jealous. Can you forgive me? For a minute I hated him, for I thought he had stolen you from me. Who is he?"

"Don't you know?" Surprise was in every word. "Why, he is the man of the theatrical world; the one manager they all strive to act before."

"I HATE HIM!"

"I have always known him, and he would have given—"

"Girl! Do you mean that I had a chance with him? That he might have placed me?"

"Yes; but now he says you're only an amateur, and I know he's right. I could have forgiven the failure, and might have loved you more for it, but not the jealousy. I'm a woman, and I know happiness never lies along the road of jealousy and suspicion. You see, my amateur, it takes only a little thing to kill a woman's love, and yet it's harder to kill than a man's, but when it dies, it's quite as dead."

"Girl! Girl!" he cried. "I didn't know! Give me another chance. I'll be different! Oh, forgive me and let me try again! I can't give you up so easily—"

"Perhaps some day, when you have learned to play your part well," she said sadly; yet in her words he detected a ray of hope.

"I shall study faithfully!" Reverently he took her hand. The door banged softly, and the girl was alone.

"And he will," she said slowly, "for I believe in him."—New York Press.
