While in Redford last Saturday M. T. Crawford lost his pocket book containing about $40. He was in the lumber yards to get a few boards and from there went to a store on Grand River avenue and thinks it slipped out of his pocket at either of these places or between the two. A reward is offered for its return.

The sale of village lots at Redford goes on at a merry clip, some being over $14,000 worth having been sold since Nov. 1. Everything points to a big growth for the village another year. A drug store and a grocery are among the new things proposed in the immediate future, while another party is looking for a site for a two-story block which will contain two stores on the first floor and will be occupied by merchants. A tailor shop and a dentist are also among the likely acquisitions which will not wait for spring. There are still other things in the air of which we are not privileged to speak at this time.

Pocketbook Lost
Either at the lumber yards or on Grand River avenue in Redford last Saturday afternoon a pocket book containing about $35 or $40 and some grocery tickets and Yale lock key. A generous reward will be paid to the finder if returned to owner or if left at the printing office. M. T. CRAWFORD, Farmington, Mich.

HOT WEATHER IN ARIZONA

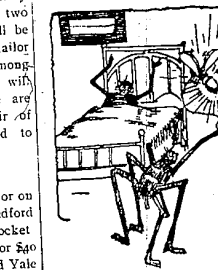

Veracious Narrator Tells What Happened to One Tenderfoot Who "Knew It All"

Tom McNeal quotes Abe Peters as telling the tale about one summer he spent in southwest Arizona: "The mercury stood most of the time at 130 in the shade, but would occasionally get a hump on itself and run up to 160. In the sun it ran from 150 to 200. All the people who undertook the climate took to the coolest places it was possible to find during the middle of the day and stayed there from eleven o'clock to about four o'clock in the afternoon.

"There was one tenderfoot, however, who wouldn't take any advice. He thought he knew it all and said that he didn't propose to lie 'round like the trifling natives. He would go out and work right through the day like he back east. He tried it one day and that settled it. When he went out in the morning he was a tall man, about six feet three. When he came in that evening he was only five feet long. He had melted and run down during the day. His legs were perfectly straight when he started out, but as they softened up with the heat they bent under his weight and when he came in at night he was so bow-legged that a two-year-old calf could have jumped through the loop.

"He really was a peculiar looking sight. His features had melted and run together so that you couldn't tell where his nostrils left off and his eyebrows commenced, and his ears had slipped down on his neck. After that he knew enough to stay in the shade during the hot part of the day."—Kansas City Star.

TUNING UP

Nathan Franko, the maestro, tells a story on himself. He was playing the violin at a concert in one of the large cities before an appreciative audience. When he appeared on the stage he was warmly received. He played a selection, the work of one of the great masters.

As the notes of the violin sounded through the hall the audience listened with rapt attention, excepting an elderly man and woman, evidently from a country town. They manifested little or no interest, but fidgeted in their seats. Mr. Franko was nettled at this and could not help watching them.

Then he distinctly heard the man say to the woman: "I wonder when he'll get through tuning up?" Mr. Franko says he was disconcerted for the first time in his life, so much so he was almost unable to continue. —New York Herald.

GETTING READY.

"Say, pop," said little Bobbie Wilkins, "I'll give you five cents for that $2 collar box I gave you for Christmas last year."
"Oh, I don't know, my boy," said Mr. Wilkins. "What do you want it for?"
"Why," said Bobbie, "you seemed to like it so much I thought I'd give to you again next Christmas and now I'm 15¢ behind." —Harper's Weekly.

COMPLICATIONS.

"So you have women's suffrage in your state."
"Yes," replied the western statesman.
"How does it work out?"
"Well, I confess that it interferes with domestic discipline. Whenever I have occasion to correct my small boy I am afraid he is going to coax his mother to use her political influence against me."

UMPIRE ALWAYS THE "GOAT"

Food for Reflection in Brief Comment of Spectator Who Was Leaving the Baseball Grounds.

The Plumville baseball team had challenged the Skinnervilles to do them battle, and there were mighty doings in the big field back of Kearney's barn, which was the Plumville baseball grounds. All Plumville and a great part of Skinnerville perched like a flock of crows on the rail fence that surrounded the inclosure and watched the game.

Later in the afternoon Ezra Hopkins, hobbling painfully along the main thoroughfare of Plumville, met Bert Harvey returning from the game. "Come over, Bert?" asked Ezra.

"Ya," vouchsafed Bert.
"Who beat?" asked Ezra, eagerly.
"The Skinnervilles," returned Bert, briefly.
"By how much?" inquired Ezra.
"Two to one."
"Pretty close," commented Ezra.
"Yes," replied Bert, "I'm down. I don't know but they're havin' a fight about it up there now. They was mobbin' the 'empires' when I come away."

WORTHY OF HER.

They had met at the seashore. Together they had roved the beaches or sat beneath the shade of the pines, listening to the murmur of the wild bathers.

Now the time for parting had come. Her hand was resting on his arm; her eyes looked up into his trustfully.

"Henrietta," he said, swelling hard, "it has been the most beautiful week of my life. But I have no right to such happiness. You are an heiress. You have believed me to be a member of your own class, but I have deceived you. I am a poor man; I am only a ticket chopper, and you must forget me."

Through tear-filled eyes Henrietta Millyuns beamed on him.

"I know you are only a ticket chopper," she said. "I have known it ever since Thursday when father told you up in New York. But you are a gentleman, none the less. Remember, Charles dear, you work in the McAdoo tunnels." —News.

ELIZABETH KNEW.

Uncle Jack, who was visiting them for the holidays from the west, wished to talk to Elizabeth's father at his office. He could not find the telephone directory and thus appealed to three-year-old Elizabeth for information regarding the telephone number.

"Elizabeth, what does mother ask for when she talks to daddy at his office?" he inquired.

"Elizabeth was wise for her days. "Money," she replied.—Christian World.

REAL GRATITUDE.

The panhandler accented the sporty-looking man and was somewhat surprised when the latter produced a half-dollar and handed it over.

"Gee," said the panhandler, "four bits! Will you have a drink with me, partner?" —Cincinnati Enquirer.
