WORST DAMAGE DONE BY COMMON INSECTS
 East Lansing.—The mass attacks upon farm crops made by locusts and army worms attract a great deal of attention at the time of their occurrence but in reality the losses caused by them are small in comparison to the damage done by such unseasonal insect pests as weevils, cutworms, maggots, and the many varieties of beetles whose unfeeling appetites cause an unceasing stream of requests for help from the entomology department at Michigan State College.
