nine, which scored its second victory of the season Sunday.

The effective hurling of 'Herm' Hartner, who held the Finance team to eight scattered hits was mainly responsible for West Point's victory.

Bobby Veach, expected to star in the Finance team's attack, was held hitless by Hartner, who forced the former Tiger star to hit into two double plays. In the first inning with runners on second and third and only one out, Veach hit to Wolfson, at third, whose throw to the plate nailed the runner.

Girardin started on the mound for the Detroit team and was pounded for 15 hits in 8 innings. Burton allowed two more in the ninth. C. Wolfson led the West Point attack with four safeties out of five trips to the plate.

Hartner was accorded brilliant support in the Finance team engineering three double plays. The winners jumped into an early lead, scoring twice in the opening stanza. Millross doubled to right and scored when Derr, Regal catcher, heaved the ball wildly to third on his attempted steal to third. Halvay was retired. Moore to Okrie, C. Wolfson singled through the box. R. Clement was hit by a pitched ball. R. Wolfson singled to left, scoring C. Wolfson, and Hobbs walking, filling the bases, but Johnson and Hammerschmidt fanned.

West Point scored two more in each of the third and sixth innings and added one run in the eighth and ninth innings.

The largest crowd in history saw last Sunday's game, approximately 1,000 fans being present. An even larger crowd is expected Sunday to witness the battle for the top position.

By JANE OSBORN

MORE than once Mrs. Hawkins had been asked much the same question by some one or other of her boarders at Cliff house. Now it was George Kennedy's turn—as he stopped in Mrs. Hawkins' little office off the main hall to ask her for his mail. He had hesitated as he stood there with his mail, turned to go, and then turned back again.

"By the way, Mrs. Hawkins," he said rather suddenly, "do you happen to know who lives in the little white cottage just east of this house?"

"Sarah Seabury," said Mrs. Hawkins, only she said something like "Sarah"—and then she added, "yes, pretty much alone—a maiden lady."

George Kennedy was more disappointed than he liked to admit even to himself. Of course there was no woman with a maiden lady with the name of Sarah could slug divinely.

George Kennedy was not particularly interested in music. Even his music usually made him feel sad. But the strains that had floated over from the little white cottage the night before after he had gone early to his room at the hotel had filled him with a sort of joyousness that he could not explain. For a time he thought that it all came from some radio—and that the voice was in fact that of some world-famous diva. But then as he heard the same voice practicing scales a little later and sometimes stopping along the same bars of a song over a number of times, George was convinced that there was nothing radio about it.

As he had listened the night before he had felt that he knew her, that he could see her—and now all he had to satisfy him was the knowledge that the musician was a maiden lady and that her name was Sarah—Sarah Seabury.

George looked friends of his on the beach, went gelling that afternoon and fished an hour or so away with girls at the country club. And all the time he felt the keenest conviction that he had been disappointed. He had listened to that sweet, magnetic voice with the assurance that he might actually know the woman who owned it. And here he was standing in the chatter of two girls with voices that seemed to him particularly irritating and metallic. In his room he might hear the enchanting voice again.

He was turning to go, amidst some protest on the part of the merry little party sitting in the clubhouse, when they seemed to forget all about him. There were cries of greeting from the girls. Some one said: "Hello there, Sarah." The next moment a girl—or as it seemed to George a goddess—came into the room from the door through which he had intended to leave. Seeing that George was not so intent on leaving as he had appeared to be some one mumbled an introduction. George made a gesture of regarding his watch—and said something about not knowing it was so early. And as he was looking at the girl he realized that he had fallen in love—love at first sight—and only a little while ago he had fallen in love—love at first sight. He marveled at his own susceptibility.

Then some one suggested that the girl sing for them, and without waiting for the urging that would have followed, she went to the piano. With the first two or three notes George set up in his chair, amazed. It was the voice he had heard the night before. Abruptly the girl stopped singing. She said she had to hurry home. George looked at his watch again, said something about going, and started after her. They went off in the same direction. George said he was going to Cliff house and the girl who was going in the same direction seemed willing enough to have George walk with her.

"I live in the little cottage just beyond Cliff house," she told him. "Father and mother have gone to Europe so I'm staying there for a while with our old maid."

"But I understood that there was some one there named Sarah Seabury."

"I'm Sarah Seabury," said the girl, "only they all call me Sarah."
"But the woman at the hotel said it was a 'maiden lady,'" stammered George.

"Well, did you think I was a widow or a divorcee?" asked the girl laughing. "Maiden lady is a polite way of saying I'm an old maid. I'm twenty-five."

George lingered two weeks longer than he had any right to do that summer—sent word to his office that he had found he needed a longer rest. Mrs. Hawkins looked a little depressed after he had gone. "Well, he'll never come back here," she said. "I counted on having him for a regular after-dinner drink."

But that maiden lady next door set her cap for him. I understand she actually got herself engaged to him. I suppose they'll be married soon and next year they'll both be at the cottage."

Coffee Owed to Arabians

The Arabians are given the credit for discovering and promoting the use of coffee as a beverage and also for the propagation of the plant. This was probably as early as 800 A. D. The coffee drink had its use in the classical period of Arabian medicine, which dates from Rhazes (850-922).

Farmington Woman Is

Mrs. Effie Seger of Farmington was honored recently by the district Epworth League when she was chosen vice-president of the Ann Arbor district cabinet. Mrs. Seger is the first Farmington resident to hold an Epworth League district office.

The newly elected officer attended a meeting Tuesday evening at Saline of the old and new officers, for the purpose of acquainting those newly-elected with their duties.

Married On Parents'
25th Anniversary

A joint celebration was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Hawkins, west of Farmington, last Saturday when Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary and their daughter, Evelyn was united in marriage to J. B. Carlek of Detroit. Miss Mary Teschrofer of Detroit acted as bridesmaid and P. C. Carlek, also of Detroit, was best man.

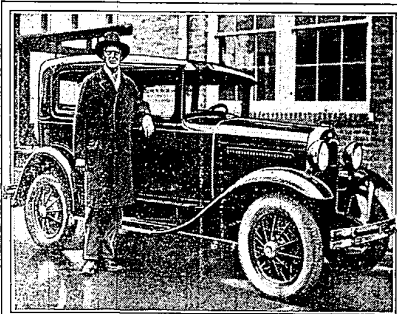

The wedding was attended by only the immediate relatives of the Hawkins family and Mrs. Anna Carlek, mother of the groom.

OLDEST FORD DRIVER

J. M. Crow, 89, of Ethel, Miss., the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi, traversed the historic old Natchez Trace in a covered wagon eighty-seven years ago.

As rugged today at 89 as the age in American history he so picturesquely typifies, J. M. Crow of Ethel, Miss., is the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi and one of the oldest in the United States.

When as a babe of two years he rode with his parents in one of a train of 30 covered wagons out of Cobb county, Georgia, into Mississippi, the old Natchez Trace followed by the brave little band was still infested by the swashbuckling ruffians whose bloody outrages gave that era its place in this country's history as "the outlaw years."

One of his vivid memories is hearing, as a boy of six, the news of General Scott's victorious assault on the heights of Chapultepec which ended the Mexican War in 1847, and his proudest memory is of honorable service as a Confederate soldier during the Civil War. When the southern cause collapsed, Crow was compelled to trudge 400 miles on foot to the old homestead at Ethel where he settled down to rear a family.

In the intervening years he has seen the lumbering stagecoach give way to the fleet automobile and the comfortable motorbus, the soggy gumbo and rough corduroy roads of his childhood to the wide, paved roads of today, and although he was long past middle age before the modern automobile became commonplace he is as enthusiastic a driver as youngsters who can boast less than one-quarter of his years.

Five generations of Crow's family are frequently seen together in his Model A Ford, the second of its type Crow has owned and driven.

PAINTING POINTERS

Sunshine for Sale by the Can! It's not so absurd as it sounds. Color in the home does give rooms a sunny feeling. Why not a bedroom that greets you with a happy "good morning" or a breakfast table, or nook that puts you in good spirits? Why not a brilliant bookcase or table that warms and cheers the living room? It is easy and inexpensive to do things in color with quick-drying WaterSpar.

Don't Waste Money with Humber Cheap-Price-Per-Gallon Paint on the outside of the home! Average figures given by 300 dealers and painters show that when the price is even more than a dollar per gallon lower than the price of quality paint, cheap paint, because it is so "shy" in covering capacity, saves less than $3 on first cost of painting the average house, and that it is so lacking in durability that on a five-year basis of keeping a house painted, it costs almost three hundred dollars more than if quality paint such as PAT-TON'S SUN-PROOF had been used in the first place.

For Your Really Important Job of Painting, Call a Good Painter. It takes skill, judgment and experience to do a good painting and decorating job, and it shows in results and longer service. Don't place your job merely on a low-bid basis. Select a responsible painter and do not put him in competition with a mere "handy man" who doesn't know either his job or his own costs.

Some Stores Merely Handle Paint, Mostly on Price and as a result of poor quality and dissatisfied customers must change their brands every few years. We're the paint business SERIOUSLY and the most important thing we've done is think about brands that will give you satisfaction. That's why we handle the Pittsburgh Paint Products line—for 75 years famous for finest quality at reasonable prices.

Good Brushes Mean Good Results. Good brushes contribute to better results. Don't jeopardize the results from quality material by using anything but good brushes. Ask for HORSE-SHOE brand brushes.
