OPERATORS AVERT PANIC IN N. J. STATE HOSPITAL

While the building in which they worked in the State Hospital for the Insane at Greystone Park, N. J., was a mass of flames, two telephone operators, Mrs. Nellie Beasgaard and Mrs. Pearl Schlotz, remained calmly at their switchboards throughout the blaze, and carried on their work, in spite of personal danger.

It was just ten minutes before Mrs. Beasgaard was to go off duty when the fire broke out. She at once notified the nearby fire companies, and when Mrs. Schlotz reported, the two remained at the switchboard, answering and passing hundreds of calls, and working under dangerous and uncomparable conditions for twenty-four consecutive hours, with only short relief periods.

With a tarpaulin to shelter them from the water used to fight the flames, they did all they could to protect the 2,000 mentally deranged patients of the institution, while the upper floors of the administration building burned. Water flowed down the hallway, and the ceiling and chandelier of the room where the switchboard was located had to be braced with beams and a heavy tarpaulin, but a panic was averted, due in large part to the service rendered by these operators.

Black Mask Nearly Upset Johnny

By Y. E. KATES (Copyright.)

HENRY was quite a group standing near the electric switch when it all began to happen—Rita Mary and Johnny Montgomery, and their hostess, Mrs. Stone-Morris, and a cluster of young girls, and butler at side.

Throughout the room the guests were dancing to the radio music, or talking in groups, or patting off in cozy corners.

Mrs. Stone-Morris had been telling the history of the matchless string of pearls that encircled her lovely neck. It had been the proud possession of queens. Crime and bloodshed had followed in its wake across the continents. Its price could build a small empire.

"They are so beautiful," exclaimed Rita. "But if they were mine, I'd be afraid to wear them, with the history they have. Aren't you afraid of thieves?"

Mrs. Stone-Morris smiled calmly. She was an unusual woman. "Thieves," she repeated in amusement, and shrugged, as though at an inconceivable likelihood.

Johnny Montgomery eyed the necklace contemplatively. "Now, if they were mine," he said, with the humorous candor that made him so dear to Rita, "I don't think I'd wear them around my neck."

"I'm sure you wouldn't," put in his hostess. "I'd sell them," he said, "pearl by pearl, and I'd buy you a castle of amber and roses, with a sky hung low with moons, and a brand new—"

"O-kalee!" assailed Rita. Mrs. Stone-Morris laughed, and was about to speak, when suddenly the lights went out. In the silence that followed, breaking only by the wall of the men at once, there came a sudden crash of glass and the sound of suppressed tumult.

Some one struck a match, and Rita cried out in terror as she saw Mrs. Stone-Morris struggling with the figure of a man in evening clothes, a shadowy silhouette of a man, with but one outstanding feature—a black mask that covered the upper half of his face.

There was a sudden rush as a number of the men joined in the fray. Then as suddenly as they had gone off, the lights were flashed on.

"I've got him!" shouted several of the men at once, only to discover that they had captured their own fellow guests in the struggle for the intruder.

Rita turned to her hostess, Mrs. Stone-Morris' hands were at her throat. The pearls were gone!

There was a rush to the telephone. The police were called. Johnny Montgomery and several other young men ran out to search the grounds. But the pearls had vanished, and Mrs. Stone-Morris, with the stolidism of one to whom life meant more than the jewels she wore around her neck, helped the party resume its gossip.

Rita and Johnny sought a corner in which to discuss the excitement of the theft.

"Just think," said Rita. "No one even knows what the thief looks like, except that he wore a black mask. How can they hope to catch him?"

Johnny nodded thoughtfully, and Rita, chancing to look down, was suddenly aware of a queer piece of black silk that protruded from his pocket. Her heart skipped a beat. Her senses whirled.

There came to her ears the shrill siren of a police car—the answer to the telephone call of alarm. At any moment the siren would burst into the room, questioning, perhaps searching the guests.

Swiftly, stealthily, she removed the black mask from Johnny's pocket. She was about to crumple it in her palms when Johnny's voice arrested her.

"Rita," Johnny muttered, "where did you get that? We've got to hide it! The police—"

But at that moment the police burst into the room. Rita leaped to her feet in excitement. For, disheveled, handcuffed to an officer, stood a sinister-eyed stranger in evening clothes, from whose pocket another officer was producing the precious necklace of pearls.

The police, in making a thorough search of the grounds before entering the house, had discovered the thief lying under the back veranda, whither he had crawled to await the opportunity for a safe getaway.

A confession followed, implicating the butler as the accomplice who switched off the lights at an agreed-upon time, thus giving the thief the opportunity to rush and make off with the pearls. Finding the mask a hindrance in the unexpected struggle that followed, the criminal had deftly removed it and had slipped it into the pocket of his nearest assistant.

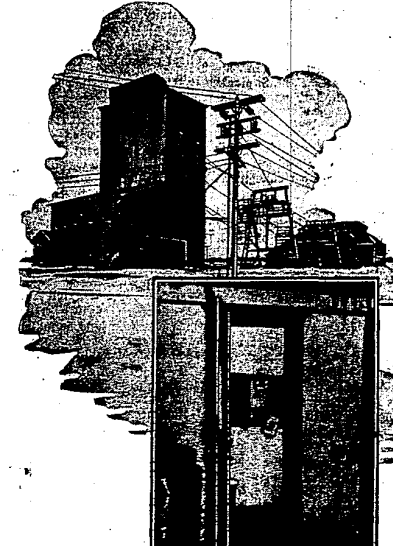

"Rita," asked Johnny with sudden jealousy, "out of whose pocket did you get that mask?"

"Yours, Johnny!" she answered. "Mine?" stammered. "Good grief! And thought—and I thought—"

But Johnny had nothing more to say. He embraced Rita with a fervor that betrayed his oblivion to his surroundings, and Rita, equally oblivious, sighed happily.

This Is World's Deepest Telephone

At the bottom of the Tamarack shaft of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Co. at Calumet, Mich., more than a mile underground, is a telephone connected through a private switchboard with the regular Bell System lines. It is shown in the picture above, as is also the shaft house of the mine, on the surface.

Chevrolet May Output Largest Since 1929

Chevrolet production during the month of May exceeded every month of 1930 and was the largest single month's output since July, 1929, W. S. Knudson, president and general manager, said in announcing the May total production of 113,852 cars and trucks.

The May figure, representing world production, compares with 113,187 last May and with 106,096 in April this year.

The heavy May output was the payroll, Mr. Knudson said.

direct result of a decided pickup in sales in certain sections of the country, notably the area along the North Atlantic seapointed out that this section was the first hit by the industrial slump which followed the stock market crash, and it appears to be, appropriately, the first to recover. Certain other sections are also showing signs of recovery in Chevrolet business, the president said.

During May Chevrolet plants operated at a normal average of five and one-half days a week, and employment went above 36,000 men, the company's normal 1931 payroll, Mr. Knudson said.

OPERATOR STICKS TO POST DESPITE FLAMES

When fire broke out at Eagle, Wis., late one night recently, Mrs. Lucille Anderson, substitute telephone operator, stuck to her post, handling calls as long as possible. The fire started in the building adjacent to the telephone office and spread rapidly. The operator finally had to be helped from the burning rooms by firemen.

Chevrolet six-cylinder trucks cost less to operate

It is a matter of record, among more and more large fleet operators, that Chevrolet six-cylinder trucks give a lower transportation cost than any other truck of equal capacity in the market.

These firms are finding, through experience, that Chevrolet sedan deliveries are capable of 20 miles or better, to the gallon of gasoline; that Chevrolet 1½-ton trucks are making fuel records which are relatively just as high. That it costs very little to keep Chevrolet trucks in first-class working order. That Chevrolet service charges on both parts and labor are exceptionally low. That the active life of Chevrolet trucks extends well past the 50,000 mileage mark.

To place your hauling on a minimum-cost basis—and keep it there—put Chevrolet six-cylinder trucks to work. A wide variety of Chevrolet-built bodies is now available. And delivered prices of Chevrolet trucks, complete and ready for work, are based on low chassis-cost and low body-cost, plus only reasonable charges for handling and financing.
