For YOUR SAFETY every Ford car has a SHATTER-PROOF GLASS WINDSHIELD

For greater safety in driving, every Ford car is equipped with a Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield. By reducing the dangers of flying glass it has saved many lives and prevented injuries in automobile accidents.

The value of this important safety factor has been known for years, but its use has been limited by expense. It is brought to you on the Ford as standard equipment only because of the efficiency and economy of Ford methods.

This windshield will withstand a 50% harder impact before breaking than plate glass of equal thickness, and is more flexible under impact. When struck an unusually hard blow, it will crack, but the danger from flying glass is minimized.

Many improvements in methods and material have been made in the past three years, so that today Triplex shatter-proof glass is recognized as one of the greatest contributions to motoring since four-wheel brakes. High speed and crowded traffic emphasize the need of the protection it affords.

Come in today, and let us explain how the Ford windshield is made. You ought to know how much it contributes to your safety, and how much more it makes the Ford a value far above the price.

Farmington Exchange Club Wednesday elected officers at its last meeting of the summer, the members voting recess meetings until the first Wednesday in September. The slate of officers named last week by the board of control, with Dr. Z. R. Aschenbrenner as President, was elected without opposition.

The retiring president, Thomas McGee, thanked the members for their support, and expressed the hope that his successor might be supported with equally as good attendance.

Spencer Heene reported that the showing of free movies Saturday nights provided by Farmington merchants and sponsored by the Exchange Club appear to have started off on another successful season.

Lost Ten Dollar Bill Found

By RUTH DAVIS SARGENT
 (By the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

HE GAVE it to her that morning with quite a bit of gusto. It was such a lot of money, all together, to hand to anybody. Stella dashed with pride as she slipped it in her worn pocketbook.

"Well, my girl," Bill had said, "I guess now you and they young ones'll be getting some of those things you've been telling me you needed."

"Oh, Bill, honey," Stella said, "I don't wonder after you've been four long weeks with your wearing out shoe leather trying to find a job, to have finally gotten placed, and to be giving me ten dollars to fix up the kiddies and ourselves!"

"Don't forget yourself, Stella," Bill admonished her. "If you see some little thing you want, buy it." And then, slowly, "but go easy with it, old girl. I don't want to tell you that I know, but ten dollars is a lot of money today. Buy the things we really need."

"I'll hang on to it till I see just the right things, Bill dear," she promised, kissing him good-bye at the door.

Stella's work went quickly that morning. She whistled a little tune as she did the dishes. It had been so long since she had had money. The kiddies were a little restless and worn in their last year's clothes. And Bill, the things he needed, and herself, too. Well, she'd buy some of them this fine morning. She'd surprise Bill to-night, with just what that ten dollars could do.

It didn't seem possible on that early fall day that tragedy could lurk around Stella, when she felt so happy and secure with the ten dollars folded bill in her purse. But it struck her forcibly as she stood beside the checking counter in Blakeley's big store, about to pay for some socks, her first purchase for Bill. The ten dollars was not in her pocketbook. Frantically, she searched the shabby envelope she carried, discovered the hole in the inner pocket where she had tucked the bill, retraced her steps anxiously to the very door of the store. But the ten dollars was gone.

She thought her heart would break as she stepped into the busy street. Bill's hard-earned ten dollars gone! How could she have been so careless. Why hadn't she noticed that hole in the pocketbook before she had placed that precious bill within it.

She paused a moment before the entrance of the great Hotel Graydon, leaning against a pillar for support. The world had gone dizzy and black before her eyes.

A car, large and shining, drove up before the Graydon, a chauffeur at the wheel. A lady, beautifully gowned and middle-aged, came down the Graydon steps to enter it. Blindly, Stella moved on. She must not miss a display of herself on the public street. Then something brushed her elbow. She turned and found it, the hand of the woman who had come down the hotel steps.

"Is something the matter?" the woman asked kindly. "You looked as if you were about to fall. Are you faint?"

"Thank you; no," Stella spoke bravely, but there was no mistaking the tears in her eyes.

"Won't you tell me what's troubling you?" the woman urged. "I can see you are bothered by something. Perhaps, it might help you if you knew I had a daughter once a girl who would be about your age today. I lost her."

The sympathy Stella saw in every line of the woman's saddened face regarding her was exactly what she needed.

"Oh, I shouldn't tell you this," she began. "I don't care if you tell it. But it's nearly killing me. This morning my husband, Bill, oh, you can't guess how good he is to me, gave me ten dollars to buy things for the babies and myself. He would so have for it. And now, well, I don't know how, but I've lost it! And it was all Bill had to give. And I've lost it!"

Stella, pained and understandingly down Stella's cheeks. It seemed so even more monstrous now that she had said it, that she had lost that ten dollars. Then she was surprised by a light in the woman's eyes.

"Do you know, my dear," the woman was saying excitedly, fumbling in her own beaded purse, "it's the most curious thing, but Jasso, he's my chauffeur, found this ten-dollar bill in front of one of the large stores. I think it was—"

"Blakeley's?" Stella asked eagerly.

"Yes, Blakeley's," the woman went on. "And my dear, I'm finding you just after you'd lost it!"

"Why, how wonderful!" Stella exclaimed. "To have you find me right after I'd lost it," she echoed like a child.

"Well, you see, my dear, I'm your dear!" The woman smiled and gave her a kindly, maternal bush.

And it wasn't until after the woman had departed in her great car, and Stella was on her way riding with the ten-dollar bill held close to her hand, that it dawned upon her that she wasn't clasping the same ten-dollar bill at all with which she had parted from home. This one was new and fresh. The other had been overworked and crumpled. But the woman and her car were gone. Stella had no idea who she was. And she still had ten dollars with which to buy things for the babies. Stella's heart gave a great bound of felicity. What a good old world it was after all!

Veterans Are Warned To Protect Loans

Over twenty-six million dollars has been loaned to veterans in Michigan to date - the average loan being in the amount of $350, and having been made to some 70,000 veterans. This wide distribution of cash has been the incentive for increased activities on the part of unscrupulous promoters.

If you have received some of this money, protect it from schemes like the following:

Cash bond rackets giving a stranger, who pretends to offer you a job, several hundred dollars to guarantee your honesty and diligence.

Worthless employment agencies paying registration fees to tricksters who advertise for men to work in South America, and other distant points, when they actually have no jobs to offer.

Territorial rights, paying a sum of money for the exclusive franchise to sell some article of doubtful value in a given territory.

Hundred percenters, giving your money to crooked stock salesman who promise abnormal returns in a short time.

Through the cooperation of numerous newspapers and particularly their Classified advertising divisions, every effort is being made to eliminate questionable offers from their columns. You are urged to call the bureau for the facts before parting with your money.
