Contract Awarded This Week For Sidewalks

who are using Farmington road entirely in their construction work. Work on the south side of the street may be started next week, if approved by the State Highway Department immediately.

Levels A Problem
City officials are facing a problem in connection with the sidewalk levels. East and West of School street the new walk, just a little above the curb level, will be three to four feet below the property-level. It is undecided whether the drop should be terraced or supported with a concrete wall. It is feared that two trees would be lost in front of the house occupied by Supt. John Dalrymple, if terracing is attempted.

Another puzzler is provided by the walk in front of the Lee Hardware store, running east to the corner, where the curb has been cut back. A grade problem is offered here, also with a difficult decision to make as to where the necessary steps shall be located.

RECEIVES INVITATION

Supt. J. A. Dalrymple of Farmington has received an invitation to the convention of the Michigan Conference of City School Superintendents to be held at the Park Plaza hotel in Traverse City Sept. 25 and 26.

Economies in school finance will be the principal topic of discussion.

Farmington Resident Looks Back 50 Years

son sisters stood just north of Curly's place on Farmington road at that time, and in it J. B. Webster made and sold harness to the farmers. He had an established reputation for making excellent goods. He was a good singer, genial, kindhearted, a Republican of the stalwart type, liberal in his religious views and with many friends about town.

The Town hall, built in 1876, was at that time the pride of Farmington. Little did the citizens think that the time would come when its ownership would be disputed and be a subject of litigation in the courts. The brick building occupied by the Victory restaurant is the oldest business building in our city and I think it was built about 1853 by Lewis Hutton and used by him as a blacksmith shop.

John Jackson, with his sons, at that time did a flourishing business as a blacksmith in a shop that stood on the lot now owned by Ulysses Grace as a residence. Many a horse was shod there and many a tool repaired there by this sturdy Englishman and his sons in the days that are passed and gone.

Dwelling houses covered the Grand River frontage where now stands Olin Russell's garage. They were owned at different periods by well-known and popular citizens including Wallace Hutton and family, Almeron Aldrich and family and others. Mrs. Aldrich was especially known for her optimistic temperament, her kindly deeds and her willingness to help others. Jacob Drake repaired wagons in a little weather-beaten shop on the ground now occupied by the Methodist church. His one-story dwelling house stood on the same lot. The land between his lot and the Barfield house on Grand River was vacant. It was low and wet and the boys, when it froze over in the winter as it often did, skated upon it.

At this time Orchard street and Maple avenue were a part of the Warner farm. There were no streets east of Power Avenue. Most all of this land was farm land, the greater part of which was owned by Hudson Wilcox and Charles Stoughton. Oakland avenue west of Grand River extended only to Cass avenue. The S. D. Harger house was the only one on the street with the exception of the Baptist parsonage which stood at the end of the lane, as Oakland avenue was called at that time.

John Collins was postmaster. The office was located in his store which was on the east side of the lot where now stands the Atlantic and Pacific store. It was long before rural delivery and the farmers came to town after their mail and to trade. Some rode in wagons, some in lighter vehicles called buggies and a few in more expensive carriages. All were drawn by horses over dirt roads.

The farmers were generally prosperous. Taxes were kept within bounds. The Township budget for roads and bridges was $1,000, other expenses, $675, total expenses, $1,675. No men were looking for work. Every man had a job who wanted one. Merchandise was paid for at the time it was bought. The boys and girls were taught to work. There were no electric lights, no radio, no jazz, but our country was prosperous and the people happy and contented.

In this brief sketch I have tried to tell of some of the changes the last fifty years have brought to our city.

The years roll on in a never ending succession. Another fifty years will come and go and greater changes will be made than have ever occurred in a like period. Most of this generation will have passed on but some of the boys and girls now walking on our streets will be here and see what time has done. Some one of them may make a record of it. May it be a story of years of progress by a prosperous people, of goals attained and part at least of life's intricate perplexing problems solved.

Petition Would Have Legislature Called

Clarence Utley, well-known Farmington farmer, has secured some real progress in obtaining signatures to a petition calling on Governor Wilber M. Brucker to summon a special session of the State Legislature to pass legislation by which the Covert Road law would be repealed, all unpaid taxes would be spread on the State books "and be forever paid," and in addition all unfinished roads would be taken over by the State and hereafter be built by the State.

Mr. Utley, in a statement to the Enterprise, said that more than a thousand signatures had been obtained and that they were coming in "like hotcakes." It is the belief of Mr. Utley that with official action upon these "evils" all causes of economic disorder would be thrown aside by one good swing of the legislative axe.

TO REPLANT LANDS

East Lansing, Sept. 23.—Replanting some of the Michigan lands which should be growing forest trees is a method of employing men who will be released from work when the field crops are harvested, and Professor P. A. Herbert, Michigan State College, says this method has none of the disadvantages of some of the relief measures.
