Grandmother Was Dodging Realities By E. R. RICHARDSON. (By the Author of "The Grandmother") ON THE way to the train to meet her daughter and the six-month-old grandson, Isabel Hingham did not feel like a grandmother. In addition, she knew that Henry Wiltshire had not suspected the unenviable relationship. Half a dozen times together, Isabel Hingham did not seem to be tottering on the brink of a proposal. Now if he discovered the existence of the grandson, he would never be deterred. She could not in her wildest imagination picture the newborn Wiltshire in the role of grandfather. Indeed, she must ward off his visits until after Peggy and the baby left. Isabel either had to feel towards the train. There was Peggy—in one arm the baby and in the other an assortment of pillows and pink blankets. The rebellious grandmotherly she shared and she rather the pink and white bunch of bouncing humanity in her arms.

"Why mother, I never saw you look so young," Peggy said, "what have you been doing to yourself?" "Just forgetting realities," Isabel replied, leading the way to a taxi. "I'm willing to be an old-fashioned grandmother though to give you the rest you need. While you're here, the baby's charge." The girl sighed as she settled herself in the corner of the seat. "That will be heavenly," she said. "I was never so tired." Poor Peggy! During the two weeks of her visit Peggy must be as free as she was in the old days, must play with the girls until the tired look left her eyes. The afternoon while Peggy and the baby slept, Isabel called Henry Wiltshire's office. Waiting for the call, she thought of no reason for requesting Henry Wiltshire not to call. Then she heard his voice on the wire. "A most unexpected thing has happened," she faltered. "I can't see to you for two weeks. I—may have to be away. I—I'll call you when I am free again."

There was real concern in Henry Wiltshire's tone. "Can I be of service to you?" he asked. "In this—or in this case," Isabel stammered, "there's nothing you can do. There are others involved besides myself." When Isabel hung up she felt that Henry Wiltshire might conclude a number of frightful things. Why, she had sounded positively melodramatic! Falling in love at forty-five was more demoralizing by far than falling in love at sixteen. Isabel Hingham had known Henry Wiltshire only two months. The company of which he was president was establishing a branch in her city, and he found it necessary to be there almost constantly until the new offices were under way. Henry Wiltshire's courtship, beginning at once, had combined all the fire of youth and all the determination of middle age. Isabel from the first was swept of her feet. Recently, however, she had been a bit disturbed by his failure to propose. The first days of Peggy's visit were so full that Isabel found little time to grieve over the absence of Wiltshire. Strangely, Isabel was rather enjoying her new duties. At the close of a day during which Isabel had had the baby all to herself—while Peggy went to a bridge luncheon—a terrible possibility occurred to her. Suppose, after her marriage to Henry Wiltshire, he should not like the baby! It was all very well to choose between a man and a baby when one loved the man and had never seen the baby, but it was quite a different matter when one knew the baby to be the most adorable darling in the world. "What a charming picture you and the youngster make!" said a pleasant voice behind her. Isabel turned, and with starry eyes and crimson cheeks faced Henry Wiltshire. Oh, her hair, her dress, her unpowdered nose! She must say something, but her tongue was dry and her mind a blank. "Call it curiosity, interest, solicitude, whatever you will," Henry Wiltshire continued, "but I couldn't stay away another day."

Isabel heard the garden gate open and close with the baby. Peggy was leaning up the path. "Oh, mother," the girl cried, "it was terrible to leave you with the baby all day." Isabel managed to murmur, "My daughter, Mrs. Kilgo, Mr. Wiltshire." Peggy acknowledged the introduction and then turned to the baby. "Did it miss its nuzzler? It's bedtime this time." Then with a nod she was gone. Isabel, having risen from the pallet, was trying to push the trunk half back into captivity. It was a relief to hear Henry Wiltshire's hearty laugh. "We are all amusing, aren't we?" he said. "Dodging realities we adore. You are beautiful today, Isabel." Was it possible that he had no distaste for grandchildren? Then she knew that he was drawing her to the rustic bench beside him. "I have loved you since that night I met you," he said. "You seemed so young to have thrust upon you my grandson almost first! Could you consider adopting one that old?" Isabel's eyes danced with happiness. "I think I could," she said, and behind the protecting trellis Henry Wiltshire blushed her.

Young Peoples Club Holds Regular Election The Farmington Methodist Young Peoples' club held its election of officers last Sunday. The new officers are: Miss Olive Roos, Virginia Hinbern, Owen Wilkerson and Carol Harger, vice-presidents and department leaders, and Norman Barbons, secretary-treasurer.

This group is planning a strong program of service devotion, and recreation which it is thought will be enjoyed by all Farmington young people who wish to attend. They meet every Sunday night at 6:30 o'clock in the club rooms of the Methodist church. Texas production seems to have broken the market in wheat, cotton and oil. May be that agricultural business was a mistake after all.
