Jim's "Bad" Dime Proved Lucky

By LEE STONE

JIM McBRIDE had a real problem on his hands, or rather on his mind and the solution was more than elusive—it simply was not anywhere visible on the horizon.

Jim was a conductor on one of those buses, the shiny, green lettered ones that cruise gracefully up and down Fifth avenue. And Jim was in love with Margy Shaughnessy who was a manicure in a swell hotel beauty shop. Jim had saved some money—he had worked a long time; and he knew that Margy was just on the point of saying "yes" to a marriage license and a little two-room flat in the Bronx or down town somewhere in the village, which would be better for him, because nearer his headquarters.

All that he needed was to make a loving gesture of love to her; he felt sure of that. Sunday was her birthday. Jim knew that if she found a big bunch of American beauty roses on her doorstep Sunday morning, and if he could take her to dinner in a taxi Sunday night after he got through—well, Margy Shaughnessy would be his life. But how to do it without breaking into that treasured bank account?

To be or not to be was Hamlet's question; but this was another very different one for Jim McBride. He had but two days left. He decided to trust to luck for one more day; and then, if luck turned her back on him, to set off for an hour on Saturday morning and draw $25 from the $500 bank account on which he hoped to provide Margy with a home.

But Jim did not want to break into that account. He possessed that quota of superstition that is part and parcel of all good Irishmen; he felt it would be bad luck. And he believed in "hunches." This was only Tuesday, and all day long he had had, strong within his soul, a conviction that he was in for a carous from Lady Luck in person.

Deciding to miss nothing in the way of those queer little chances that sometimes present themselves so casually, Jim picked up an ornately bound little book from one of the empty seats in his bus that evening and pocketed it. Who knows? Somebody might care a lot for that glossy little book with the strange, unpronounceable name on its cover; might look for him if the owner remembered leaving it, or might advertise for it with a reward. Jim McBride never passed up a chance.

Finishing his evening paper that night he decided to have a peep at the book. Disregarding the jaw-breaking name of it he studied the pictures and the wording under them with an interest that mounted every moment. Finally he rose from his chair, a strange light in his eyes, went to his closet, and carefully brought out a grimy-looking little canvas bag. The contents of this bag he spread out on his little table and examined minutely.

At last, with the light of hope and high adventure in his eyes, Jim McBride lay down to sleep. He dreamed of sending Margy Shaughnessy a stack of American beauties that would sweep her love right into his lap. More than that, he might even take her to the reigning musical hit on Broadway. Margy would fall for that, he knew.

Thursday morning arrived. This was when there were still a lot of conductors on Fifth avenue buses. A little man with a very big derby swung nimbly on Jim's big carriage at Tenth street. He looked like a foxy egg. Jim could sense that at once.

Perhaps it was a certain cocky, nervous air the little man carried. Or maybe it was the furtive, uneasy glances he cast about here and there, and over his shoulder, as he lurched through the rocking conveyance for a seat, after having pressed into Jim's little dime box, courteously held forth, the required fare. Jim rumbled; it never took him long. After that second scared look the little foxy one bent over a shoulder at him. Then he clicked the contents of his face gadget into his palm and examined each dime carefully. Then, finally, he realized that Lady Luck had stopped right in his path.

Result—A conversation between Margy Shaughnessy and Jim McBride Sunday afternoon, her birthday, when Jim dropped in with an armful of American beauties.

"Hello, Margy, mawaroonen, here's something for you!"

"Jim darling! You shouldn't do that!"

"Why not, my dear? And more than that; here's two seats to the 'Bandolers of Broadway' for tomorrow. It's your birthday, my dear."

"Oh—oh, Jim McBride! I think I love you enough to marry you."

"I was hopin' so my dear. Let's make it tomorrow at lunch time. Say here's a funny thing, Margy. I find a book on a seat the other day—see? Can't tell you the name—noon, mus', Jim struggled bravely, "mus-mat-ticks . . . something like that. Any way it's all about you. An' to-day, Margy, a foxy egg passed me one dated 1922. Whaddayaknow, gril? I cashed in on that for 80 bucks, an' got 50 bucks for the rest of my collection that's been passed up, and I had to pay the company for."

"Jim!" Her arms were around his neck.

"Let's go!" from Jim. "Tomorrow you marry Jim McBride."

Fall Is Here

With the arrival of early frosts and chilly weather one must adjust the menu as well as the clothing.

There will be bridge parties. Among the first thoughts of the hostess will be sandwiches and these will be made with whole-some Baker Boy Bread. The experienced hostess knows that no bread can surpass Baker Boy's fine texture or pure whiteness.

As a variation for an "eleven o'clock lunch" many women will serve out fresh luscious fried cakes with apple cider.
