Bird's-Eye Maple orest service is experimenting fort to determine what cause in an effort to determine what causes the formation known as bird's-eye maple. The formation consists of an indeparation which is regular and which goes from the outer part of the tree to the core. There is one theory that the tree is suppressed in growth, heavily shaded or grown under some other abnormal condition. It is not believed to be due to an insect injury or to a bark injury or to any pathological condition.

Ever See a Soprano?
When television comes we shall know whether the announcer is exaggerating when he grows cestatic over the soprano's beauty.—Toledo Blade.
