TELEPHONE CALL RESTORES MEMORY TO MISSING MAN

A long distance telephone call served recently to bring back the memory of a man who has been in the hospital in Detroit for five days as an amnesia patient. He had been found on the steps of a Woodward avenue church, and his picture was printed in a Detroit newspaper which made its way to Richmond, Va., where a brother happened to see it.

"The Richmond man called the hospital in Detroit and tried to talk with the victim of lost memory. When the connection was made, he said: 'Hello, Clyde, this is your brother Richard speaking.' The patient remained silent for a moment, then his face brightened and he remembered who he was. He had disappeared from his home in Richmond ten days previously after an operation."

Burning Potatoes Gave Them Away

By CORONA, REMINGTON
(By the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WVSU Service.)

AT THE sound of footsteps in the front yard, Mrs. Martin looked out of the window just in time to see the top of a straw hat disappearing to the porch below.

"Great land, Midge, it's that collector again as sure as I'm alive," she whispered to her daughter.

Midge put a warning finger to her fresh young lips and tiptoed over to her mother. "Keep real quiet and he'll think we're out," she said.

"Tense and silent," they waited for the peal of the doorbell. It came at first timid, then loud and strong, then long and persistent.

After a while, the doorbell was silent but they were not rewarded by a glimpse of a straw hat retreating toward and terror seized them when the rhythmic squeak of the porch swing below told them that their visitor had settled himself comfortably for the afternoon.

"We'll stay right here (ill he leaves, if it's midnight," said Midge defiantly, as she noiselessly seated herself on the bed and began basting a hem.

"But I've got so much machine work to do," complained Mrs. Martin.

"Can't do it now. Here, you can unlick this sleeve. It doesn't set."

She tossed the garment toward her mother and they worked silently for a while.

"Ninety dollars is too much for the old machine anyway," said Midge at last. "If I'd been here I never would have let you sign for it. I could have bought you a good one for forty-five."

"Maybe so, Midge, but I wouldn't have anybody know we were trying to get out of paying the balance for anything. Folks would think we were crooked. Besides, I paid $75 on it and I don't aim to lose it."

She passed a worried hand over her forehead.

An hour or more passed thus in silence. Midge was busy and contented, her mother hungry, but silent. Suddenly the girl dropped her sewing and exclaimed in a tense whisper:

"Mother, what do I smell?"

"Land, it's the potatoes I put on to boil," said Mrs. Martin, starting toward the door. But Midge restrained her.

"Here, I'll slip down." She quickly unbuttoned the strap of her shoes and, slipping out of them, hurried noiselessly downstairs.

A suffocating odor greeted her and as she approached the kitchen the smoke was almost alarming. Mrs. Martin, and of the chance hurried down behind her daughter. What had once been potatoes was now only a few bits of char giving forth smoke like a soft coal engine.

"The beans are burnt up, too," said her mother, grabbing another odoriferous kettle from the stove. We'll never get these pans cleaned as long as we live."

"Sh-h-h-h," warned Midge moving toward the sink with her pan.

Suddenly they were alarmed by the sound of scurrying feet in the hall and stood transfixed at the sight of a terrified young man. Upon seeing the two women, he started short.

"Oh-ah-eh-um," he said lamely. "I-er-thought the house was on fire and believing no one was at home I took the liberty of coming in."

Midge dropped the potatoes and sat down on her feet.

"Oh-I," she stammered.

Ignoring Mrs. Martin the young man went over to Midge and took her limp hands in his.

"You knew all along I was out on the porch. Why wouldn't you receive me? When a man comes over two hundred miles to see a girl, it isn't a very nice welcome to leave him wandering outside for nearly two hours. If you have anything to say, Midge, say it now. I think you owe me an explanation. What were you afraid of and why were you tiptoeing around with your shoes on?"

Midge blushed. She had hoped he hadn't seen her feet.

"Look at me," he commanded severely. "Why did you do it?"

Suddenly her face relaxed and she was a pathetic shy little girl struggling with a painful confession. "I—I didn't know it was you, Jimmy. Honest. I thought it was that hotel old Williamson man. He's been coming here every day and I can't stand him, so I told Mother I simply wouldn't see him again. I—I hate him!"

She was on the verge of tears.

Jimmy's arm slipped protectively about her. "Next time he comes hanging around here tell him you're engaged to Jim Hastings," he said.

"All right, I will," she answered demurely, "and now I want you to meet my mother. This is Jimmy Hastings, mother. You know I told you about meeting him when I visited Elizabeth in the spring."

Vestal Worship

The origin of the worship of Vesta is very simple. In prehistoric times, when fire could be obtained only by the friction of two sticks of dry wood, or from sparks of flint, every village kept a public fire burning day and night, in a central hut, at the disposition of each family. The care of watching the fire was entrusted to young girls, because girls, as a rule, did not follow their parents and brothers to the far-away pastures grounds, and did not share with them the fatigues of hunting or fishing expeditions. In due course, this simple practice became a kind of sacred institution, especially at Alba Longa, the mother country of Rome.

Would End Slump By Stopping Gold Flow

dropped to about $28 per capita, "which is six dollars below the level of starvation." In France, Mr. Heartt said, the laws prevent such circumstances, and for more than half a century the government of France has kept stable in that country the interest rate, which is an index of business conditions. Loans for home-building are at one per cent interest in France, Mr. Heartt said, and there is no serious unemployment.

A feature of Mr. Heartt's plan would be the use of money issued by the federal government for all public works, by cities, counties and states, as well as the nation, eliminating interest. This, he said, would cut taxes tremendously at a single stroke. Under the present system of bonding, Mr. Heartt said, government goes to private capital and asks the latter to "please loan me some of my own money."

To stop gold withdrawal from the Treasury Mr. Heartt said, U. S. currency should be made redeemable in gold at the will of the nation, as in France, rather than at the will of the bearer as in this country.

RADIO TELEPHONE NOW REACHES CANARY ISLES

Circuits Via Europe Link Fifth Foreign Island Domain With Bell System Telephones

Radio telephone service was extended in August from North America to the Canary Islands, the last outpost of the Old World touched by Columbus on his voyage of discovery.

This service extension to the Canary Islands was made possible by the opening of radio telephone service from Madrid to Santa Cruz, on the island of Tenerife in the Canaries, early this year. A forty-mile submarine cable, which carries calls to Las Palmas on the island of Gran Canaria, makes it possible to reach telephones on the principal islands in the Canaries. In all, there are some 2,500 telephones available.

After leaping the Atlantic by radio, voices cross England by land wire, pass under the English Channel and travel to Madrid by wire. Here they are transmitted by radio to their destination in the Canary Islands. This last operation is handled by the National Telephone Company of Spain while transmission from the United States to England is handled by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The Canary Islands are the fifth foreign island domain of importance to which telephone service has been opened. Voice communication to Cuba, and to the British Isles, has been available for several years, and service was extended to the islands of Java and Sicily in April, 1931. Construction of facilities is also under way to connect American telephone users with Bermuda and with the Hawaiian Islands.
