Skidding Into Court... Rounding the corner a little fast — slippery pavement—pedestrian stepping from curb—side-swiped—fractured skull and broken leg. And so you skidded into court! There he sits in the witness chair with his crutch and bandaged head. It wasn't your fault, you say; but what will the jury say? Are you keeping an Automobile Liability Policy between yourself and damage suits? It's an absolute necessity if you drive a car. Business Place Comes To "End Of The Road" (Continued from page one) on the place across the corner. When Mr. Johnson was ready to go, Mr. Engel was ready to step in, and leased the place with an option to buy. The building was remodelled from top to bottom, with two dining-rooms downstairs, and dancing and dining facilities upstairs. Bright electric lights illuminated signs on every side of the building at night, and in front was one with the name in block letters three feet high. Fixtures, equipment, decorations—in a business firms were eager for the opportunity to furnish them.

Start is Good The first few months were encouraging enough, and even the first year was not disappointing. But then descended blow after blow. Grand River avenue was torn up, and for the better part of two summers would-be customers could hardly reach it no matter how much they wanted to. The new Northwestern Highway was completed, taking an enormous share of the former Orchard Lake Road-Grand River traffic. Nor was the depression a small factor—people out of work are glad enough to eat at home, aside from "eating out." Other factors played their part.

Business-men pressing for payment of bills had long since been joined by the City of Farmington, asking payment of past due water bills. Everyone appeared to give up hope, except the man who was running the business. In June began the labyrinthian legal battle to oust him from the place. Mrs. MacManus, as holder of title, was contesting the mortgage foreclosure and the contesting of the foreclosure on her part gave the occupant of the building a figurative "lease on life," if he did not have a literal legal lease on the building. As long as the actual ownership was in dispute, Mr. Engel could hold possession. And by the grace of the contest and the resourcefulness of his attorneys, Schulte and Paré, he held it.

But in Howard C. Knickerbocker, receiver for Farmington State Savings Bank, and Earl L. Phillips, attorney for Mr. Knickerbocker, were two men whose determination would not be denied. Mr. Knickerbocker's duty is liquidation, and he and Mr. Phillips attacked the situation with just the same vigor. After the trial handed down a verdict declaring the mortgage and the foreclosure proceedings, which had been carried through by Pelton and McGee, attorney for the bank, to be perfectly legal.

There appeared now no further bar, unless Mrs. MacManus chose to appeal to the Supreme Court, a costly proceeding. But before the 20-day period ended, she gave notice to appeal and filed a bond. Meanwhile, Mr. Phillips had posted notice of a chattel mortgage sale on Monday. Not a large portion could be sold, however, for the companies who supplied the restaurant equipment on title-retaining contracts came at six o'clock Monday morning to get what they had put in. Within a few hours the restaurant interior had been stripped. One company's men even started to rip molding from the walls, but Mr. Phillips appeared on the scene and warned him, and it was put back in the building. Even the coat hooks, worth but a few cents apiece, were taken.

Early in the afternoon a deputy sheriff droned off the announcement of the sale. Little remained to be sold. A few hours earlier, what the fixture concerns did not claim, a few tables, chairs and miscellaneous pieces had been taken under an attachment in the name of Mr. Engel's apparently defunct business. In turn had apparently given up on their work. An old black range that no one seemed to want alone remains in one of the dining rooms on the ground floor. A gray and white cat with solemn eyes sits solemnly, looking questioningly through the window at whoever comes to the place.

Barrel System Enlisted As Aid For Poor Relief (Continued from page one) already responded splendidly—already the barrels had been filled with times, and a goodly supply of foodstuffs accumulated for indigent families. Large sacks of flour, many cans of various kinds of food, and other supplies were collected. This barrel will be replaced by one of the green ones this week, and all will have the same appearance.

While the County Poor Commission has been using the barrel system and gathering supplies up into the barrels into the county's central welfare office, it has been decided that Farmington would take care of its own collection, and all supplies put into barrels will stay in the community and go to feed Farmington folks.

Distribution of the baskets and collection of the annual fund is to be handled by a committee of the Exchange Club and the American Legion.

The Exchange Club Wednesday named Arthur Lamb to handle the work of distributing the baskets, as he has done in previous years. The Club voted four assistants to Mr. Lamb, from each of four churches, to aid in guarding against duplications. Those named by President Dr. Z. R. Aschenbrenner are: Baptist Church, Rev. Elmer Palmer; Evangelical church, L. Gildemeister; Methodist Church; Rev. Floyd Charles Johnson; Our Lady of Sorrows Church, John J. Schulte.

It is urged that every shopper who feels he or she can afford to help a neighbor just a little, drop something, however small, into the barrel, and feel the satisfaction of doing a kindly deed.

Falling from the roof of his shop Thanksgiving Day morning, Ward Sherman of Moorhead, Minnesota, a pioneer harness maker, eldest son of the late Palmer and Loretta Sherman of Farmington, received injuries that proved fatal.
