AN EXPERIMENT

By JANE OSBORN

(By Miss J. Osborn, Pontiac, Michigan, for the Farmington Enterprise)

"Get the right kind of woman and she can do it as well as a man."

"Stuff and nonsense! She wouldn't have the head for it. Imagine Miss Kilne or Miss Hicks here going out to sell bonds—imagine their selling any!"

"They haven't got the head for it," shouted young Tom Venner. "That's what I'm telling you. Get a woman of the right sort and she could sell bonds with the best salesman we've got—"

The middle-aged Kirk Yates shrieked his answer. "But if you get a woman like that you've got to pay as much."

"Then pay, by gummy, pay," bawled Tom Venner with several emphatic bangs on his desk. "The point isn't that I want to get a bargain, but I want to get people that will stick. Take Blodch, or Smyth, or Klinger—any of 'em—they got the head for it, and when they got real good at it, they got better jobs out somewhere else or started out by themselves. My idea is that a woman isn't so ambitious or so daring. Get two or three trained in, and we'll have a staff you can depend on. Get me?"

Mr. Kirk Yates sniffed, indicating thereby that, while he didn't "get" Mr. Venner at all, he was through arguing. "Go ahead," was all he said. "I'm only a partner. I can't stop you from trying an experiment. But don't start out with three or four. Get one and see if it works."

So it was that the employment agent who supplied the bond house of Yates and Venner with stenographers, comptometer operators and other office workers had a rather unusual position to fill. There was only one applicant on the list at this agency that was considered suitable. This was Jane Hayden. The employment agent sent a sealed note along with her. Tom Venner read it through while Jane Hayden sat waiting at the other side of his desk for an interview.

"She does not seem to have the striking personality you may think necessary for selling bonds. But there is something about her eyes that I should think would take the trick. And she's very intelligent."

Tom Venner had not noticed her eyes as she came in the room, he had merely noticed with a trifle disappointment that she was a young woman of middle size and not commanding appearance, who made no special effect when she came in the room.

Then, as he turned to talk to her, she lifted her eyes, so her light brown eyes were, with exquisitely moulded brows. They were eyes that had he never seen them again, he could not have forgotten—trustful and trust compelling eyes that made you forget everything else save the personality of the young woman who owned them.

"I think you could sell bonds, or anything else," Tom said, trying not to look at the eyes, but he too easily influenced. "The question is whether you are willing to learn enough about bonds to know how to do it."

Jane Hayden said she knew she could learn, as she was used to study, and after an arrangement had been agreed upon—whereby she was to be paid as much for what she did as a man salesman—she was formally taken into the employ of Yates and Venner.

Mr. Yates remarked to Tom that he had certainly picked a pair of good eyes, adding: "But can she sell bonds?"

Tom Venner said, "We'll see."

Jane Hayden soon proved her ability as a saleswoman. She sold bonds and more bonds, and she was always on hand when either Tom Venner or Mr. Yates wanted to see her. She never seemed to have to play golf or eat lunch or go motoring with the people to whom she sold the bonds. By all means she was the best bond "salesman" they had.

"Here's something that I don't suppose you've thought of," said Mr. Yates. "Here we've got a first-rate bond salesman. She has learned the business and she's making money for us and for herself. And not being a man she isn't ambitious. She won't want to start out for herself. That was my idea about getting a woman—"

"Your idea!" cried Tom. "I don't remember that it was your idea."

"I didn't say much," smiled Mr. Yates, "but that morning I asked you to get a girl—that was the idea I had in view. There's no reason now why this Miss Hayden shouldn't remain with us for years."

"No reason but one," said Tom Venner hastily and with color mounting in his already ruddy face. "She might marry some one in the business—"

"Well, as I am a married man myself," said Mr. Yates with a concealed smile. "and Miss Hayden can't get a divorce and as Royden is about a foot shorter than Miss Hayden, and as Ben Short is engaged, I don't see much to worry about."

"What about me?" cried Tom. "You!" gasped Mr. Yates. "Does she care about you? Well, I'm blessed. Then he laughed.

"She's got wonderful eyes," said Mr. Yates. "but it's bad business for you to take her away from the firm."

Former Students Greet Wells D. Butterfield

About 35 men and women from Trinity church, Highland Park, visited the Farmington M. E. church Sunday evening after which they were given an informal reception by Miss Emily Butterfield at her home. Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Johnson were also guests at the reception.

These people from Trinity church were members of Wells D. Butterfield's Bible class when he and his family were members of that church. A fitting address of appreciation for his splendid work as teacher of that class was given by W. J. Graham. Mr. Butterfield responded.

For The Women ---

The Christmas Club is a popular and useful plan of saving among women. And it must be admitted that the "female of the species" is more thrifty than the male. Statistics show that nearly 80 per cent of savings depositors in the United States are women. This is a striking indication of the wisdom and foresight of the wives and mothers and all business women and home managers.

The Christmas Club appeals especially to the women and to others who see the advantage of a plan in saving. Saving with a plan and for a purpose, keeps the interest and urge for saving through the year.

There is still time to join our 1932 Christmas Savings Club. Join today!
