Volume Of 1877 Tells Of Town Hall Shares

petual lease of the upper portion of the building, which left the whole expense incurred by the township at three thousand four hundred and fifty dollars, including the lot.

"Prior to completion of the hall, the township-meeting had been held at the public houses, since the days of Nathan S. Philbrick and Solomon Walker."

Tells Of Lodge

Further on, under the heading of "Societies," there is a paragraph regarding Farmington Masonic Lodge, as follows:

"Their first place of meeting was the hall in the stone building of Oliver B. Smith in Farmington village; and after its destruction by fire in October, 1872, the lodge met for a time in the wooden building of Noman Lee, whence they removed to the hall in Warner's Block, upon its completion, and this they occupied until December 27, 1876, when the new Masonic hall was dedicated. It embraces the entire upper story of the town-hall building, the sashes holding a lease of the premises for the term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years, for which was paid a cash consideration of eleven hundred and fifty dollars."

So far as is known, the former of the two quotations of above, is the first reference that has been found to the people of the village having subscribed their portion of the fund "as an inducement to secure the location of the building there." The article in general conforms to other material submitted in connection with the Town Hall history, including the copy of the 999-year lease found by Mr. Hogle's father, James L. Hogle, some several years ago.

Aside from the Town Hall question, the old volume is a veritable treasure-house about old days in Farmington. It was prepared, so the book states, by "Professors S. W. Durant and H. B. Pierce." Whether or not they actually were professors or were merely called such as was often the custom in earlier days, they did a thorough job. Mr. Hogle has consented to loan the book to the Enterprise after the Town Hall case hearing, in order that some, at least, of the gems of history contained in the book may be reprinted.

Almost any one of them is worth the price of the book itself, whatever it sold for in 1877. There is, for instance, one rollicking account that begins thus: "In Farmington as, in most other towns there are several conflicting accounts of the first barn-raising carried through without the use of intoxicating liquor, and it is wholly impossible to say who was really the first to accomplish the end so worthy and much to be desired; but the accounts seem pretty clearly to establish the fact that it was neither George Tibbets nor Chauncey D. Wolcott, as has been supposed by some to be the case."

There follow detailed accounts of each of these barnraisings, with no essential facts omitted.

The Enterprise hopes to begin printing of installments of this interesting history at an early date.
