New Bus Schedule For Farmington Suggested

P. L. Radcliffe, general manager, and A. D. B. VanZandt, public relations officer of the Eastern Michigan System were in Farmington recently and conferred at length with the publisher of the Enterprise on the bus situation.

Mr. Radcliffe stated that he has experienced difficulty in locating residents who were reported to have been complaining that the bus service is not adapted to the needs of factory-men.

He also expressed the feeling that his company had not received the co-operation and support that has been accorded applicants for local bus-lines from time to time.

A number of factors in the year and a half the company has been operating between Farmington and Redford were pointed out as having contributed to dissatisfaction rather than good-will toward the company. Both representatives declared that they had completely satisfied every community in which the company operated thus far, and that they were confident they could still do it in Farmington.

Miss Margaret Brandes, nine year old niece of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Brandes of Walled Lake, was killed when the car in which she was riding was hit by a train at Ithaca. Her mother Mrs. Grace Brandes and three of the latter's children were also injured. The accident occurred July 23.

Deputy Wellie Coe reports a series of accidents over the week end in the vicinity of Walled Lake. Friday evening a car driven by Mary Johnson on Decker road failed to stop at Orchard Lake-Walled Lake Road and crashed into a car driven by Arthur Kekkon of Howell. Several persons were injured. Another accident occurred when Robert Shaw attempted to pass Jerry Regentik at the entrance of the latter's yard south of the Twelve Mile Road. Mr. Regentik's car tipped over and the rear wheels were broken.

Peirce Carrigan and two other occupants of his car were hurt when a fire blew out on Maple Road east of Walled Lake.

Walter Cytacki, Hamtramck pulled off a side road North of Wixom and was hit by James A. Dupont of Detroit, Sunday. George Cytacki was injured and taken to Dr. E. J. Lindsay's office for treatment.

Steps in the Evolution of the Telephone Switchboard.

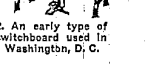

1. The world's first commercial telephone switchboard, 1876.

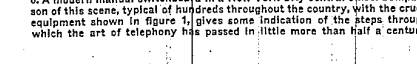

2. An early type of switchboard used in Washington, D. C.

3. A modern manual switchboard in a New York City central office. Comparison of this scene typical of hundreds throughout the country, with the crude equipment shown in figure 1, gives some indication of the steps through which the art of telephony has passed in little more than half a century.

4. A switchboard once used in Richmond, Va.

5. Boy operators were employed in this New York City central office of 1879.

6. A Milwaukee switchboard of 1883.

7. Following telegraph methods, connections on this "plug-board" switchboard were made by inserting solid metal plugs between horizontal cross-connecting bars and vertical rows of metal buttons connected to the various lines. Figure 8: The most striking change, as exemplified in today's manual switchboard, is the great compression of equipment required to handle the concentrated traffic of the present.

8. A Milwaukee switchboard of 1883.

After Alexander Graham Bell had invented the telephone, in 1876, the need for some means of interconnecting several telephone lines at one central point was soon apparent. Within a few years, widely different methods were tried out in various parts of the country. In 1880, the Western Electric Manufacturing Company brought out the standard switchboard, and this fundamental design and the method of operation have been followed ever since. Developments have been toward accommodating the rapidly increasing number of telephone subscribers, and toward perfecting the equipment and circuits which give the highly efficient service of the present. Some steps in the evolution of the switchboard are shown above. Figure 1: True to its name, the switchboard installed for the New Haven District Telephone Company was a "board" with "switches" on it. Figure 2: Following telegraph methods, connections on this "plug-board" switchboard were made by inserting solid metal plugs between horizontal cross-connecting bars and vertical rows of metal buttons connected to the various lines. Figure 3: The use of double-ended cords, instead of switches or solid plugs, is shown in this telegraph-type switchboard. Figure 4: Cords were used in this New York City office of 1879, as was also an early type of hand telephone for talking with subscribers; the boys were soon replaced by girl operators. Figure 5: This Milwaukee switchboard, in use five years after the introduction of the first commercial switchboard in New Haven, shows the use of construction more nearly resembling modern practice. Figure 6: The most striking change, as exemplified in today's manual switchboard, is the great compression of equipment required to handle the concentrated traffic of the present.
