Another Vacant Chair

Once again, as so dishearteningly often in recent months, Farmington's head is bowed in grief at the loss of a foremost citizen, one of the best-loved among them all. Harley Warner, Dr. Holcomb, Dr. Miller, Charles Ely, Ralph Hogle, Alex Keith, and now Olin Russell—the past year has taken the heaviest toll of any twelve-month in Farmington's history.

When in a large city a prominent man dies, it is, besides being a shock to his friends, a matter of front page news for a day or two, and then it is forgotten. There are so many to carry on that the loss of just one does not seem to matter so much after a little time has passed. But in our little community, where one man counts for more than in a large city, the loss of a single valued individual is one from which we do not soon recover. We could so ill afford to spare any of those that have gone, and each successive loss has made all the others seem so much the greater.

It is comforting to reflect that in the passing of Mr. Russell there are many to share with us the sense of a vacant place. He had a natural liking for folks, and they liked him. Because he was so sincerely and so genuinely interested in others and in their welfare, his wide circle of friends extended far in every direction. He was a perfect example of that axiom which admonishes us to "make more friends through our business than business through our friends." Thus it was that people came from far localities, from other communities and from distant farms, going past a number of places where similar products and service were to be had, because they wanted "to deal with Olin Russell." The number of his customers was vast, and the number of his friends was no less, for he had made every one to feel truly that he was their friend.

Farmington, like every other community, has experienced its trial and stress these past few months. It has suffered its losses of two kinds, in material things and in men. Probably its losses of the material kind have been greater than most communities—surely they have been sufficient. Yet they can be replaced. But certainly no community in this whole nation has suffered, more grievously in the passing of its men than has Farmington, and it is just this loss that is the irreplaceable one. Others may come along us and we can but hope that they may be able to bring with them a community spirit, and develop it in living among us. But these men who have so quickly followed one another in their passing, have been a vital part of the community life itself for so many years that they leave vacant places that are hard and ever harder to fill.

Last Call For Voters!

Last call to re-register for citizens of Farmington Township! With the final date less than a week away, only half of the anticipated registration is recorded at the office of the township clerk. This in spite of the indications that there is more interest in elections throughout the county, state and nation than in many years.

The human habit of procrastination is one explanation. This means that there will be the usual last-minute rush to get in "under the wire." Many scores, perhaps even hundreds, will lose their votes, due to another human habit, negligence. They will probably be all the more eager to vote in November.

We Soon Shall Know

So when look in The Mirror no longer for Detroit's news of the day, dished up in form to titillate the senses and beguile the eye, with the "life-stories" of the latest public character. Odd enough it is that of all things, the rollicking word tabloid should relinquish the field to the sedate Free Press, as much its opposite as one will find in many a mile of travel, as determined in clinging to the old traditions of journalism that the Mirror so lightly, cast aside, and so steadfast in its opposition to many of the very things that The Mirror represented.

The Free Press denies it was a sale, and there is no reason to doubt its statement, also denying the rumors which are denounced as "pure viciousness." There might be other answers to the rumors. The owners of the erstwhile tabloid might, for instance, have acquired an interest in Detroit's remaining morning daily. If this possibility were true, one of the need to wait long to see Messrs. Patterson and McCormick, of the Chicago Tribune and tabloid New York Daily News, will strongly influence if not dominate whatever they are interested in. Pick up your Free Press a year from today and you will have the answer.

So we already begin to hear much, and even more, about the glaucous annual Romeo Peach festival. It's all right with us, since those folks seem to have the ambition and energy to work it up and put it over. Only one thing disturbs us. Perhaps memory fails us since our school days, but it still seems to us that the way Shakespeare had it, it was not Romeo but Juliet that was the "peach," and Juliet "the peach" that he was after. But maybe our memory is fuzzy.

The Mirror's trade-mark was a camera, and as has often been noted, the camera never lies. The Mirror did not lie. At least we do not know that it did. It merely told the whole—and perhaps at times the somewhat naked—truth.

Concerning Life on Mars
The late Professor Lowell was a proponent of the theory that Mars may be inhabited, but there are yet few astronomers who regard it as proved. Life as we know it on earth depends on a number of special conditions, among which are a favorable temperature and a supply of water and of oxygen. Oxygen and water appear to be very scarce on Mars and the temperature unsatisfactory.
