SILKS AND TUBS

By DORIS M. THOMPSON

MIL straightened up from the tub free from the warm suds to brush some scraggly hair off her face as she stepped out of the room. Then she wiped her hands on the side of her apron and picked up the basket of clothes to carry to the lines strung across the yard. She was tired and in a few minutes Bee Williams would be there with another new silk dress and more tales of her wonderful life in the city. Already the car was turning into the lane; heavy flannel shirts, colorful aprons and house dresses. No silks there. Her eyes were bitter as she turned to greet Bee. "Hello, Mill. Why honey, what's the matter? You look as if something terrible was going' to happen." Mill shrugged. "Nothin' now could happen around this place." "Aw gee, Mill, why don't you come back with me? We'd have a grand time in the city. Frank could find a job for you easy." "I'm eyes looked almost hopeful, but she shook her head. "Oh, I couldn't take a chance. I'd never get away without pa knowin' it, and if he did . . ." she shrugged. "I'll do my best to know. You can fix things up on the sly and slip out during the day when he and Eric are in the fields. Pa will lend you money enough to get there. I know what I'll do when I get back. Frank and I'll look around for a place for you and let you know when to come. How'll that be?" "Half afraid to agree, Mill nodded assent. "I must be gettin' back with the car now. Don't forget to come to our party tonight. We're going to have the Baxter boys over to play," she called as she walked back to the car, her cheap red silk dress blowing around her knees. Mill remained seated awhile looking over the barren acres of Dakota farm land which stretched on every side. Scrubby bushes poked up here and there. She pictured without turning about the scene behind her. A three-room shack, hideous and unpainted, four rooms, if one counted the place above set between the rafters which served as a place for Eric to sleep. She thought of Eric and wondered if he ever felt as she did. Her thoughts passed on to her father, her Hank Hanson he was called. For thirty years he had clung to his claim, thirty lonesome years of hard labor for his women folk. First her mother, whose more genteel raising failed to stand the grade, had made her leave twelve-year-old Mill to carry on her work. Now after sixteen years of . . . Mill rose as she saw her father approaching from the field. She finished hanging the wash and went into the shanty to prepare the noonday meal. Her father entered but she did not look up. "Sorta late gettin' dinner, ain't ya?" "Yuh, I guess so," she answered listlessly. "Suppose Bee Williams kept you talkin' all mornin'. Saw her car from the field." Mill finished the supper dishes early. She had nothing else to wear to Bee's house but she wanted to go. It would be her first party in three years. When she put on her old voile she looked clean, nothing more. Her father watched her preparations. "Hope you ain't plannin' on takin' the horse any time, Mill. I've got to go over to Simon's to borrow his harness." She turned without a word and re-entered her small bedroom. Every day she waited for word from the big city in the bordering state and always she was preparing for her departure, little things at a time so he wouldn't notice. Then a letter came. Hank Hanson met the mailman himself and brought it in. "See you got a letter from Bee. What's she up to now?" Mill went to her room to read it. "Come as soon as you can," she read. "We have found a lady who will wait for you." Bee had planned everything. The next morning Mill sent a note to Mrs. Williams with the mailman saying that arrangements were all right for the following afternoon. Everything was on the way when noon the next day. Mill was a little more calm but her eyes had an anticipatory look for the first time in years. At 1:30 she was to leave and taking a last look she went to one place which had been home to her the set out for the barn. Half way there she was stopped by an excited clammering of voices near the road. A group of men were huddled together as if they carried something. "Your father's hurt, Mill. He was out by the road when Henry Crabbs' team of runaway horses caught him. Will you get a bed ready?" She stood as still as stone. "Don't take it so hard, Mill. I know it's a shock but maybe he won't be so bad off." Simon tried to console her. She turned to re-enter the hut. "Til fix his cot," she said in a toneless voice. That night Mill went out to the barn. Hitted a stray suitcase from the rig and brought it into the house. Hank Hanson's eyes gleamed across at her in the lamplight as he lay on his cot, saw the suitcase. "The doctor said he would lie there the rest of his life.

RAMBLERS DEFEAT NORTHWESTERN A. C. IN OPENING GAME

Local Team Loses, 19 to 16, As Visitors Open Up With Passing Barrage. Falling before a barrage of short passes in the last quarter after it had gained a 13-point lead, Northwestern A. C. was defeated by the Rambler A. C. of Detroit last Sunday at the Northwestern grounds, 19 to 13. Northwestern Juniors won over Rambler Juniors 6 to 0, in a practice game. Pat Mohardt intercepted a pass and ran 70 yards to a touchdown in the first-quarter, then in the third period shot a 15-yard pass over the goal line to Eddie Christensen on fourth down, to give Northwestern a lead of two touchdowns. The team became winded as the game drew to a close, however, and wilted before a persistent Rambler attack. Northwestern plays at Wyandotte next Sunday. The junior team will meet Howard A. C. on the home grounds at 2:30 the same day.

DeMolay To Visit Detroit For Initiation

The Fellowship Chapter, Order of DeMolay, will motor to Detroit Loyalty Chapter and have both degrees conferred on candidates on the evening of October 11. This allows the local chapter to initiate new members while the new officers are becoming accustomed to their chairs and at the same time offers a pleasant visit to another chapter. The chapter will attend church as a group October 16, at the ten o'clock service at the Plymouth Presbyterian Church. Fellowship Chapter attended church about once a month during all last year, making such visits in various churches at Farmington, Northville and Plymouth.
