VOICE MAGNIFIER MAY BE CARRIED BY HAND

Portable Public Address System Is Boon to Speakers

The latest convenience for this year's political campaigners, which enables an orator to pack the shouts of a giant in a suitcase, was made known recently with the Western Electric Company's announcement, that there is available a complete public address system so small that it may be carried around by hand. Designed by the Bell Telephone Laboratories, the system provides enough amplification to magnify the speaker's voice from one to many thousand times its natural loudness, according to the requirements of the surroundings.

For Use With Lapel Microphone

The entire equipment, including the case, weighs 70 pounds. It includes amplifier, loudspeaker, control unit and the necessary connections. It operates from the regular alternating current electric power supply.

To make its convenience complete, the miniature public address system is arranged for use with another miniature device developed by the same engineers, the so-called lapel microphone, which came into prominence during the broadcasting of the national party conventions at Chicago. When the orator arrives at his indoor or outdoor meeting, he need only set the case down in a good place, plug in the electric light line, pin the tiny microphone on his lapel, step up on the platform and commence talking in his ordinary tone. The wire from the microphone gives him 30 feet in which to make dramatic strides and gestures.

Provides for Remote Control

A volume control is also provided, so that an attendant seated as far as 30 feet away from the loud speaker may adjust the amplification of the speaker's voice in conditions if the audience may require.

The system can also be used with an electrical reproducer to amplify phonograph records of music or prepared speeches.

WORRIES OF CHRISTMAS

I asked my mom last night when Santa Claus would bring, N'ma turned white n'said "Not anything."

I's kind of frightened, Cause he never forgot before, But my heart soon lightened I never said no more.

I did lots of thinking, though, Then I decided to write To old Santa, my best friend, Up in the land of snow-white.

"Dear Santa, do you know why mom gets sad When I ask her what you'll bring?" Is it 'cause I's been bad Or 'cause dad pawned her ring?"

"But you know dad ain't working Maybe that makes her heart throb, Santa, I'm sure we'd all be thankful If you'd get my dad a job."
