Tells Of A Stirring Election Year—1876

The Republican party under the leadership of Jackson, were surprised and the election illegal. The Democrats charged that the Republicans had unlimited funds, which they used to buy votes in doubtful States and to bribe election boards and induce them to falsify the result and that President Grant at the request of his party leaders sent United States troops into the southern states, who took possession of the polls and prevented the voters from casting their ballots as they desired. The Detroit Free Press, then a strong Democratic paper, in glaring headlines, charged the Republicans with a conspiracy to steal the Presidency.

Democratic headquarters was in Dr. Woodman's drug store. When men of that faith gathered there, they discussed this story and believed it. Bitterly did they denounce their opponents. From December 1876 to March 1877, new and startling stories of fraud and corruption appeared almost every day. No man knew who the next President would be and for some time it appeared probable that both Hayes and Tilden would claim the office and both be sworn in March 4th. Two rival governments would then claim power with the attendant chaos and bloodshed that would certainly follow an action of that kind.

But at last the good sense of the Democratic leaders prevailed. Tilden, to his everlasting credit, accepted the findings of the Electoral Commission and notified his party chiefs that he would not accept the office. Since that memorable campaign of 1876, there have come and gone. The passions of the time have cooled. The principals in the great contest have gone to the silent land, but the question of who was the rightful victor is as unanswered as it was in the fateful days of the long ago.

HONOR 78th ANNIVERSARY
Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Hatton entertained at a dinner party Sunday, honoring Mrs. Martha Hatton of Ypsilanti whose 78th birthday anniversary occurred February 22. Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hatton and their son Richard and daughter Julia of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Morse and sons Thomas and Robert of Dearborn, and Miss Mary Hatton, of Ypsilanti.

One charge made over and over again was that Negro voters in the South were driven from the polls by intimidation and violence and in some instances murdered when they tried to vote. Because of these unlawful methods, the Republican votes were suppressed and the election illegal. The Democrats charged that the Republicans had unlimited funds, which they used to buy votes in doubtful States and to bribe election boards and induce them to falsify the result and that President Grant at the request of his party leaders sent United States troops into the southern states, who took possession of the polls and prevented the voters from casting their ballots as they desired.
