Return To The Land

(Daily News, Orange, California)

The return to the land movement, given impetus by the depression, is not confined to the inhabitants. Investment money promises to follow the same path.

The 1929 crash in industrial securities has the truth of the old axiom that property is the real basis of wealth. Land and commodities, physical manifestations of wealth, are the root of trade. Money is not wealth, but the measuring stick of wealth.

Some respectable economists believe that a great deal of investment capital withdrawn from the real estate field during the fat years of stock gambling will again return to that field. The inflationary movement on which the country is launched will tend inevitably toward the increase of commodity prices and as inevitably react on land values. Land will take its ancient place as the foundation stone of the economic structure.

As currency expansion shrinks the idle dollar, so the urge toward investment increases with the promise of rising commodity prices. Real estate should feel some of the first effects of the return of investment money to the firing line.

Currency expansion, an inevitable tax on money, in that it reduces public and private debt, with a compensating relief of taxation on land and commodities, must direct the attention of the investor to property investments.

30 Years In Business

(Trenton Times)

Last Friday marked the completion of thirty years of continuous operation for the Ford Motor Company. In these thirty years the Ford car has undergone great changes. The history of the Ford Motor Company and Mr. Ford himself have been marked with a series of significant events.

One of the reasons for its great success is because it has been a means of transportation to the poor man and gradually the rich have come around to buying the Ford product for it finally offers the deluxe product with every big car convenience inside. Its biggest factor has been its low cost of operation.

For many years the Ford Motor Company concentrated on the Model T Ford, a four-cylinder car which built the Ford millions. With the change in thought toward improved automobiles, the Model T was scrapped and the Model A substituted. And finally today the latest product of Henry Ford is the eight-cylinder deluxe car, one of the finest low-priced cars on the market.

In the thirty years it can almost be likened to the transformation of a wagon to a coach.

During the past few weeks the Ford Motor Company has been running a series of advertisements in the newspapers throughout the state in an effort to promote better business. The company feels the best way to bring its message to the public is through the columns of a newspaper.

Education

Public education is necessary for the safety of democracy. Our needs because we insist that the school teach what is beneficial to the community and to the children and what is for the welfare of all concerned. . . . I don't agree with the theory that people have too many things and should be deprived of the advantages of modern civilization. Do we want peasant workmen and peasant farmers in America? The time has come when we need to consider problems, not only of our welfare, but the problems concerning the welfare of the next generation. We must provide revamped education to meet future needs. The schools have never taught war, but peace; never extravagance, but thrift; not intolerance, but tolerance.—Dr. Lotus D. Coffman, president of the University of Minnesota.

Surely There Is A Way

(Detroit Free Press)

The announcement by George R. Hogarth, Conservation Director that 30 of the 53 State parks are to be closed after July 1, invites a good deal of consternation.

The reason Mr. Hogarth gives for his decision, a decision made in face of a protest from Governor Comstock, is substantial enough. The Director says he hasn't any money with which to pay caretakers, and parks cannot be left open to the public unless there is somebody around to look after tables, stoves and shrubbery, and dispose of refuse. He contends that a large investment will be destroyed if units are left open without protection from careless, destructive and untidy people.

We do not feel disposed to question the correctness of the Director's decision. He is charged with the care of the State parks, and a part of his work is to see that they are guarded from vandals. There are not enough funds to enable him to get caretakers for all, so he is shutting down some, and he would be open to censure if he should do otherwise, and destruction and abuses were the result.

None the less the shutting of more than one-half the State parks of Michigan at the very opening of the summer season is a highly unusual and for many reasons, not the least of which is the injury the closing may do to a business upon which thousands of people depend for their livings.

Michigan is a great resort state and a great attraction for tourists. Both resorters and motorists have been attracted here because they have been sure of good accommodations and good health and sanitary conditions, in addition to a lovely climate and fine scenery, and the accommodations provided motorists by the State parks have been among the material attractions for persons from other parts of the country.

Michigan cannot afford to allow its facilities for accommodating visitors to run down nor its carefully and legitimately built up reputation to lapse. If it is possible to find a way in which all the State parks can be kept open throughout all the summer that way should be found.

Relief That Relieves

The American farmer should have no just cause for complaint. His plight during the past few years has so aroused public opinion that finally constructive legislation in his behalf has come out of Washington.

Under the national emergency act, not only are the prices of job better prices for his products, but Uncle Sam is also stretching out his long arm to save him from financial disaster.

Let us hope this help arrives in time. Under the farm adjustment act processors will be assessed 30 cents a bushel on wheat, which will be paid to every Michigan farmer who will agree to restrict his wheat acreage another season. This allotment will be available for this year's crop, starting by September 1.

The Present Generation

(News, Van Nuys, California)

Today there is more sentimentality and brotherly feeling manifested in the world than for many generations.

More are living on the same level. Until the present there were thousands, who because they had not experienced it, could not sympathize with those neighbors in financial distress.

Suffering and privation bring people closer together. A certain generosity of heart comes to the surface when before many never knew it existed.

One thing about Gandhi—he'll never be bothered by the wolf hanging around his doorstep.
