Leafy Alfalfa Is Best

The percentage of leaves as compared to stem is one of the factors to which an inspector and grader of alfalfa hay gives particular attention. A high proportion of leaves is the most important single indication of quality. This is because the leaves of alfalfa carry about three times as much protein in proportion to their weight as the stems do. Protein is the most expensive and most valuable part of alfalfa hay, and hay cured to retain a large proportion of its leaves is worth more and deserves the higher grade. The hay grades, as defined by the United States Department of Agriculture, are designed to reflect real market values and consequently the alfalfa grades emphasize leafiness.

Henry Hudson

Henry Hudson made four notable voyages to America from 1607 in search of a northeastern passage to China and latterly a northwestern one. He explored the coasts of Spitzbergen and Nova Zembla, the Hudson river and Hudson strait and bay. He wintered in the bay, in 1610-11, at the lot of James bay, and on his return voyage was set adrift with eight companions in a small boat and never again heard of. "Of all the dark mysteries of the merciless ocean, no mystery lies wrapped in deeper shadow than that which hangs over the fate of Hudson."

Artist and Model

LOU, ascending the bus stairs, clutched the hand-rail as they tore up Fifth avenue. It was 3:00 a.

Her pierrette costume was unused, her disposition was ruined. It had not been fun to watch Jerry get more and more absorbed in Eunice; Eunice, whom he had promised so long ago not to keep playing around with. Lou smiled grimly, and hated men.

Jostled from side to side she finally made a seat. The bus was deserted save for a middle-aged man sitting towards the rear. The thought of her own beloved father flashed through her mind; and she hated him too; hated him for having been so correct in his appraisal of Jerry.

"He just isn't made of your sort of stuff, my pretty." That's what her dad had said.

The bus sailed along some ten blocks when Lou looked up, startled.

"I was wondering if you'd pose for me?" It was the man from the rear seat. He stood at her side, poised lightly. His nose he was, and knowing. Dark, crisp hair splashed with gray at the temples. Lou was not the first young thing to think him stunning.

"I'm an artist," he explained. "And I find you an unusual type. The way your hair coils around your head, for instance."

Lou turned coldly aside. He took the liberty of seating himself beside her.

"Isn't this quite a late hour for a young lady to be going home alone?" he queried. "Especially when that young lady is beautiful?"

"I'm not necessarily going home," she flung at him, and turned abruptly away to scan the deserted streets.

"Oh ho!" he laughed. "I'm getting a front row seat on modern youth."

His face was very sober as they streaked under an arc light.

"Still," he continued, "you'll admit it's quite late for a young girl to be out alone. If you were aged and stooped it wouldn't matter. But, my dear child, there are all sorts of men abroad at this hour."

"Apparently."

"What would your mother say?"

"Precisely what my father would."

"Oh, they get along so ideally, do they?"

Lou smiled, but ever so slightly. Really, he was quite sweet.

"And what would your father say?"

"Precisely what you did," snapped Lou.

"Then you do have caring parents. If it means anything to you, they're perfectly right."

"I'd like you to know," she glared, "that Jerry won't get the opportunity to do this sort of thing again. For I'm not used to floating around at all hours by myself, and I don't intend to become used to it."

"That's something." He heaved a little sigh.

"Go on," he prompted.

"I'm going on. But only because I don't want you to get the wrong impression."

"One might."

"My escort got interested in someone else."

The man's sparkling eyes lost their twinkle.

"You shouldn't have such an escort."

"I haven't, have I? Let me continue."

He bowed his head, requesting pardon. His glance, somehow, melted Lou.

"It's all over now," she sobbed.

The man looked relieved, vaguely troubled. "Um. You like him?"

"Terribly. Don't I look as though I did?"

"Yes, you look terrible. If that's what you mean!"

Lou dried her eyes immediately. "Oh, I loathe you men!"

"There, there!" He went so far as to pat her hand. "I told you you were lovely looking—I told you you looked terrible. And neither verdict pleased you. Did I say the right thing at the wrong time or the wrong thing at the right time?"

"You asked me to pose." Lou realized, as she studied his bowed head and his whitened knuckles on the head of his cane, that after all Jerry wasn't worth cornering one's thoughts over. "What kind of a picture are you doing?"

The man looked up, radiant at the change in her. He felt unspeakably happy that the blue eyes were no longer misty.

"A gypsy sort of thing," he answered eagerly. "You can let down your braids and wear gold hoop earrings."

"I love gold hoop earrings," she murmured. "Do you let your models keep their accessories?"

"I do this one." He beamed. "You're a crafty young 'un!"

"What time, and how soon?" she asked.

"Tomorrow. But not until the afternoon. I want your eyes to subside."

"My eyes!" she was scornful. "You don't give a hang about me, do you?"

"More than you'll ever know, my pretty." And they both made a motion to ring for the next bus-stop.

Carefully he helped her down the stairs. She leaned against him comfortably, contentedly. When they alighted she looked up at him with glowing eyes.

"Dad, you're a peach. Don't tell mother, will you? She was never too keen on Jerry, either."

ELIMINATE ALL OLD FOWLS, SAYS POULTRY ADVICE

Poultry-farm owners and all those engaged in the extensive chicken and egg industry around Farmington will be interested, and perhaps somewhat startled by a recommendation of drastic action within their industry by the United States Department of Agriculture, for the purpose of eradicating tuberculosis, which is reported spreading rapidly among poultry flocks in this State. Though the advice offered by the Government bureau may have been issued from various sources before, the issuance of such a call from a Federal Government source, with strong emphasis, appears unprecedented and gives indication that the Government officials believe a critical problem faces the poultry-raising industry, one of the chief activities of this area.

What the Government advises is the complete disposal one a year of all old fowls by every poultry-raiser, to check and in time completely eliminated tuberculosis among poultry. This urgent recommendation is made to all poultry-raisers in this vicinity by T. S. Rich, U. S. Inspector in charge of Tuberculosis Eradication at the Bureau of Animal Industry located in the Lansing office of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Mr. Rich appeals to the poultry-raisers as follows:

Freedom from disease is more to be desired in a poultry flock, than fancy breeding.

Healthy Chicks can be produced only from or among healthy fowls.

Seventy-five well kept fowls free from diseases will produce more profit than a large flock where disease exists.

Losses from death are extensive in a flock where infection exists, but mature deaths seldom or never occurs in a young flock free from disease.

An infected hen seldom produces eggs during the later stages of disease, therefore, when egg infection takes place it is probably during the early stages of the disease.

The above facts apply to all poultry disease but especially to tuberculosis which is taking an extensive toll in its spread through the poultry flocks of Michigan.

To control this disastrous spread of infection we urge the disposal of all fowls each year and the building of an entirely new flock from chicks known to have been produced by healthy fowls. We urge that new flocks be raised upon clean ground entirely apart from the old flock. After the disposal of the old fowls all buildings and runs must be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before being occupied by the new flock.

If you will follow this advice, each year, there will be health, wealth and happiness in the keeping of poultry.

Find Danger in Using Drought-Ruined Grass

Drought brings a double loss to raisers of sorghum and sudan grass, two of the principal forage crops, for the lack of water not only cuts the crop and stunts what little grows but makes that little highly dangerous to feed to live animals as green feed.

There is always prussic acid present in these two grasses but seldom in sufficient quantity to be dangerous. When the grass is stunted by drought, however, the percentage of the acid present is increased about 250 per cent. It is present in sufficient quantity to kill grazing stock.

When this grass is cut and cured in a silo, however, it again becomes usable after being properly cured. The grass when stored is set down to aid fermentation, and during the fermentation the excess prussic acid is driven off. Rapid curing, however, fails to bring this assurance of safety.

The Department of Agriculture recommends to farmers in doubt as to the extent to which the acid has been removed to try it out on one or two animals, rather than on an entire herd, so that if the acid is present in lethal quantity an entire herd will not suffer as a result.

The Rowan Tree

The rowan is properly classified as Pyrus aucuparia since it belongs to the same family of trees as the pear and apple; its fruits are not strictly berries but pomæ.

Cause of Higher Ocean Waves

Because of the distribution of the land areas, storms of equal intensity cause higher waves in the oceans of the southern half of the world than in the northern.
