Cut Household Package Wastes

You can help solve the nation's solid waste disposal problem by following the three "R's" of ecology - reduce, reuse, and recycle - a Michigan State University marketing specialist reports.

Packaging materials account for 13 per cent of collected household waste and an even higher percentage of roadside litter, says Mrs. Sheila Morley. In a typical year, Americans throw away 48 billion cans, 26 billion bottles, 4 million tons of plastic and 30 million tons of paper.

Help reduce these figures by limiting your purchases of products with excess packaging materials, such as individually packaged servings of lemonade mix or snack crackers, Mrs. Morley suggests. Replace disposables such as napkins, paper towels, foil pans and plastic spoons with cloth, glass and durable dishware which can be washed and reused.

When possible, buy larger product sizes - a 16-ounce box of cereal instead of two, eight-ounce boxes.

Aluminum foil and plastic wrap should be used selectively because they cannot be degraded or recycled. Instead, use covered refrigerator dishes, Mrs. Morley advises.

You can also cut both your food budget and the amount of clutter by making your own puddings and gelatins instead of buying ready-made products in individual metal cans or plastic dishes.

When you have a choice, buy meats, fruits and vegetables in cardboard-like pulp trays instead of plastic trays. Also, molded-pulp egg cartons are more easily disposed of than plastic foam cartons.
