Once you sit behind the wheel of the Ford V-8—and feel its satin-smooth "pick-up" you'll readily understand why thousands of former expensive car owners are now owners of Ford V-8's.

"Tin Can Island" Gets Mail by Canoe Delivery

The Island of Niuafoou, or as it is popularly known, "Tin Can Island," is one of the Tongan or Friendly group, and is located in the Pacific ocean some three hundred miles from Samoa, and about midway between Honolulu, Hawaii, and Sydney, New South Wales. The name of the island, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune, is said to mean "many new coconuts," and while the island itself amounts to little, it has the distinction of producing the largest coconuts in the world. Niuafoou has a letter writing population of five or six and one of these, with time on his hands, conceived the idea of the Tin Can mail.

A vessel of the Union Steam Ship company of New Zealand was engaged to call at the island and put off and receive mail in sealed tin cans, which were carried to and from the steamer by native swimmers, for the nature of this volcanic island is such that vessels must anchor a mile or more off shore. Some time ago the Tin Can method of carrying mail was supplanted by a canoe line, due at least in part to the sharks which have a special fondness for swimming postmen.

Peafowls

Peafowls are indigenous to Asiatic countries. They are plentiful in the large forests of India and are found also in the mountainous regions. They have been quite widely domesticated in America and in England where winters are not severe. There are four varieties of peafowl, known as Black Winged, Common, Javan and White. They are bred purely for ornamentation. The Common peafowl is the variety most common in India. The Jungle fowl is a breed with fairly long tail feathers. This name is applied to the wild fowl from which it is claimed the modern domestic varieties have descended. Red and gray varieties predominate. They resemble the Rhode Island Red or the Leghorn chickens in body formation.

Mexican Hairless Dogs' Color Changes With Age

Most hairless dogs are remarkably intelligent and very active. A circumstance particularly true of the terrier-sized specimens, some of which are attractively built along lines of the Manchester terrier, says an authority in the Los Angeles Times.

Occasionally one of these attains that racy whippet-like fineness. Another larger variety bordering 25 pounds, . . . short-legged, cloddy and more unpleasant to the eye, is inclined toward laziness. Tiny specimens weighing four or five pounds are often erroneously referred to as Chihuahuas.

Commonly called the "Mexican" hairless, he may, nevertheless, be found throughout entire Central and South America and is frequently encountered in parts of Africa, China, the Philippines and West Indies.

The color of his sausage-like bald exterior changes, often with age. In puppyhood it is usually shrimp-pink with a few black or blue spots. As pouching maturity, these spots increase in size and number, gradually blending into a solid color along the back.

Others remain unchanged. They present a marble-like combination of color. Still others are of a mottled brown. Texture of the skin, while not that quality one loves to touch, is soft and extremely delicate, . . very sensitive to changing temperature and easily blistered if exposed to the sun.

Henry George's Platform Had to Do With Taxation

When Henry George ran for the position of mayor of New York city, his platform was largely based on the precepts which he had set out in Progress and Poverty, notes a writer in the Washington Star. He believed in equality and freedom and was opposed to ignorant prejudices. He believed in the abolition of custom houses and of excise and licenses. His platform involved social organizations rather than political ones. He spoke of poverty in the city of New York and the crowded conditions. In speaking of his platform he said:

"We propose in the first place, as our platform indicates, to make the buildings cheaper by taking the tax off buildings. We propose to put that tax on land exclusive of improvement, so that a man who is holding land vacant will have to pay as much for it as if he was using it."

He further said that he had made a vow to seek out and remedy, if he could, the cause that condemned little children to lead such lives as they were known to lead in the squalid districts. He said that he was beginning a movement for the abolition of industrial slavery.

Angler-Fishes

There are various kinds of anglerfishes, many of which live in the ocean depths where they must prey on others. The common goosefish or angler of the Atlantic coasts has an enormous head and mouth, and brightly colored fringes about the jaws, which serve as lures to attract the smaller fish on which it preys. The anglers of the ocean depths have a special attachment on the head or back; at the end of the line is a bulb-like swelling that contains a gland with a luminous secretion. There is some evidence that the light can be switched on and off; when turned on, it acts as a lure to bring other fish near the angler's mouth. In one genus called "Lasiognathus," the line ends in a triangle of hooks.

Poplars Impoverish Soil

Poplar trees do impoverish the soil in the sense that they sap the moisture out of the soil and make it difficult for other plants to obtain sufficient moisture. This habit of poplar trees is caused by the fact that their roots are surficial and do not descend to any depth.

"Mending Political Fences"

The phrase "mending of political fences" is said to have originated in 1880 when, just before the Republican national convention, a reporter was sent to interview John Sherman, then secretary of the treasury and a likely candidate for the Presidential nomination. Arriving at Sherman's farm at Mansfield, Ohio, the reporter could not find him. He asked where he was and was advised that Sherman was mending his fences.
