The Right Girl

By M. BRUCKER
Michigan Newspaper Syndicate, 25111 Ave. C.

"WHEN the time comes I'll pick the right girl," Don Farrell had said. "You'll see."

Don Farrell was in Galesville on a government engineering job.

He had made the quoted remark on his first day in Galesville. Bob Haines had just told him he'd bet on the wrong girl.

Don had the prettiest crop of girls south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Don had just grinned—picked up his grip and asked: "Which way to the best boarding school?"

"Mrs. Ann Nelson's orer on Myrtle street," Bob had replied. Then he'd winked at the fellows standing about the soda bar in the drug store. "But you bet you'll start picking that girl before you're 24 hours older!"

"I'm pretty hard to suit," Don had said, "but you'll see."

Don hadn't been in Galesville two days when he had them both down to the drug store and it didn't take half an eye to see that he was falling fast . . . but which one? The tests can be made rapidly and the person doing the testing can tell before he releases a bird whether it is a carrier or not. Birds which react can be removed from the flock immediately. Pullorum disease, one of the serious maladies affecting baby chicks and is transmitted through eggs of the diseased mature birds. Removing these mature birds reduces the chance of the chicks being affected.

The cost of the test is only about two cents per bird. The men awarded certificates are not permitted to test the flocks of others but they can eliminate pullorum disease from their own flocks. This will cut the losses of baby chicks purchased by Michigan farmers.

Michigan is one of the important centers of baby chick hatching industry. The reputation gained by the state will be maintained if all hatcherymen use every endeavor to improve the quality of their breeding flocks.

CHICK HATCHERY OWNERS STUDY DISEASES

The intention of the owners of Michigan chick hatcheries to use all means to improve the quality of the chicks sold by them is proved by the time devoted by them to learn of eliminating any disease carriers from their breeding flock, according to the poultry department at M. B. C.

Sixty-seven men were awarded certificates stating they were qualified to make tests on birds in their flock to determine if the birds were any carrier of pullorum disease. The certificates were given after the men completed an intensive course of training given by bacteriologists on the college staff.

FARMINGTON HAS QUIET HALLOWEEN

Contrary to this time last year in Farmington when a few residents and merchants were wondering what had become of certain pieces of their property, or having located them were trying to restore them to their original places, there is no occasion for a discussion of Halloween pranks. In fact, this Halloween is said to have been the "quietest Farmington has seen in years."

Taking advantage of the uncertainty among a great many people as to the date of Halloween, some people thinking it was Wednesday while others held it was Thursday, bands of Halloweeners ramed the streets by 8 nights, looking very much as if they were not going to do content with military stunts, but windows of making faces and massacres by, however, nothing of any consequence occurred.

With the memory of last year's Halloween episode still fresh in their minds, many Farmington residents gathered their garden furniture, refuse containers and other things which Halloween cut-ups might think would look a lot better in the middle of Grand River and Farmington road, and put them under lock and key so as not to tempt anyone. Even so, there were a lot of things overlooked, or ignored purposely in the hope they might be removed, which might have been carried away to parts unknown.

Although there was some discussion of a community party to which merchants would have been asked to contribute, nothing was done about it. However, there were a great many private parties throughout the city which may have been partly responsible for the lack of Halloween evidence littering the streets.

A few people who are accustomed to receiving young Halloweeners were prepared with cider, doughnuts, apples and peaches which they gave to their callers, not only out of generosity but to pay for the protection of their property.

And so, Friday morning, when it was all over until another year, Farmington people wondered why there was nothing new to talk about except the earthquake which occurred earlier in the morning and which was not felt by enough people to make the conversation interesting.

DETROIT INSTITUTE DISPLAYS RARE AMERICAN BOOKS

The original order book that Washington kept at Valley Forge, Benedict Arnold's report of his ill-fated expedition against Quebec, Benjamin Franklin's personal copy of his own book on electricity, and Thomas Jefferson's famous letter on religious toleration rest among famous old American manuscripts now in exhibition at the Detroit Institute of Arts. The display is a feature of the American Folk Art and early American furniture shows.

The most valuable article consists of the original deed and survey of Washington's birthplace—Wakefield, Hopewell, Virginia. During his lifetime, Washington wrote more than 30,000 letters. One of the longest, a seven-page folio on agriculture, appears in the exhibition. Included also is a letter in which Lincoln assailed the Civil War governor of Kentucky for attempting to remove loyal Federal troops.
