When the wear in this age of complex test ing device—one of the mine and the material is conton or linen. The inger test is effective, according to an expert, because linen aborbs water more rapidly than cotton. Thus when water is placed on a mixture—cotton threads running one way, linen crosswise—it forms an oblong spot instead of the circular one characteristic of pure linen. In all cotton the spot will be circular, too, but the water will remain on the surface a long time before being absorbed.
