Peace on the Campus

(Exchange)

Students and faculties alike may congratulate themselves on the manner in which peace demonstrations were conducted on American college campuses this year. Indeed, cooperation by university officials, which in the past has too often been unwisely withheld, this year made the word "strike" a misnomer for many of the gatherings. Notable speakers addressed the students, who for the most part showed themselves orderly and earnest advocates of peace. The relatively few cases of disorder which have resulted from attacks on the peace groups by student gangs elsewhere upland.

One of the chief objections to student peace demonstrations has been that they exploit the same emotional elements that are the cause of war hysteria—that the leaders have had to rely on the promise of excitement and on an appeal to the readiness of young people to exhibit their independence of restraint. The students have answered such criticism by pointing out that those who could help them make the student peace movement effective have often thwarted, or even ignored, its efforts.

This year's "strikes" have been most striking because they have shown that cause for criticism either of students, or faculties and school administrations, is lessening. On the one hand, students have shown a willingness to listen to mature leadership, evidently recognizing that such leadership has much to contribute to the cause of world peace. On the other hand, older people have known a more constructive interest in the students quest for peace, and a new sympathy with the student's determination to face up squarely to the problem that is presented. That student peace demonstrations are becoming more peaceable is a tribute to the growing understanding with which people of all ages are fortifying themselves against war.

One Touch of Love

(Exchange)

The self-sacrificing heroism and unflinching resolution of a company of Nova Scotia miners has triumphed and the people of a continent—and beyond—rejoice with them in the rescue of the two survivors so long imprisoned in the Moose River gold mine.

It is an old but always inspiring tale, this disregard of all personal risk on the part of miners whose companions are in danger. Like the men that go down to the sea in the bows of the earth perform superhuman feats of endurance and courage when things go wrong. They always have—before the radio was discovered to record the drama as scene and scene unfolds.

The touch of nature that makes the whole world kin is the touch of love. Right here in the very midst of the cynicism and discouragement invading a world it is good to be reminded that the elemental principle guiding mankind does more often give it rein. Strange that a world will pray for the saving of two human lives today and stand by supinely watching preparations for murder in the mass.

Happily, such episodes as that witnessed at Moose River renew mankind's confidence and assurance that the marching feet of armed hosts and the mightiest guns never can stay the power of love. Because its origin is divine.

Are You a Wisher or a Willer?

(Exchange)

We wish that every person, once each year, were required to write the following sentence one thousand times: "I live in a free democracy, where the will of the people shall rule; I pray that I may remember that the only way I can hold this freedom is to accept the call of informed citizenship that goes with it; I hope that I will not forget that the surest way to lose this freedom is to neglect the intelligent use of it in matters relating to government, local, state, and federal."

You cannot maintain a muscular body unless you apply this body to the performance of manual labor or other vigorous exercises. Citizenship in a free democracy exists only when it is used by an alert and thinking majority of citizens. When the right citizenship is not used, it atrophies, gets tired and flabby, and when an emergency

Believe in Yourself

(Royal Oak Daily Tribune)

Give me the man who believes in persistent effort. He has an objective in all that he does, and he keeps the light of it constantly before him.

No trumpets announce his successive steps from one vantage point to another. He does not for a moment cease to need continuous urging. His urge comes from within, and directs his course from day to day. The seeming flare of spasmodic achievement disturbs him not. But when the months have rolled by he has gained ground steadily, and as the years succeed each other, he becomes what the world is pleased to call an "outstanding success."

Some gain success quickly, apparently without effort, and we are prone to call them "lucky." Too often the results of such success are lost just as quickly and just as easily. Persistent effort goes to the end. It does not rest on laurels gained, for the persistent worker finds joy only in continued achievement, no matter how much may already have been gained.

Leaving Crime Speechless

(Christian Science Monitor)

One of the most widely cited dangers of organized crime is that it may use its ill-gotten wealth to purchase legal immunity. That view fails to take into account the integrity inherent in most individuals. The racketeer does not believe in the idea that money talks. But many people are never in a listening mood.

A little honesty, so to speak, goes a long way in serving the end of justice. The drive against commercialized vice in New York County offers a recent example of how completely it disarms those who resist the required process of law. The refusal of Carl E. Bailey, Attorney General of Arkansas, to accept a $50,000 bribe to block the extradition of Charles Luciano, alleged ringleader of the racket, is part of an attorney general's job. But it shows how powerless the fugitive was in this instance.

The stubborn resistance that has beset Governor Lehman's anticrime program within the Legislature at Albany points out still another way in which undercurrent influences are striving to perpetuate their tenacious power. Supporters of legal reform should not be discouraged. The amount of opposition aroused only emphasizes the potential effectiveness of bills now pending.

Part of the anticrime program already has been enacted. It is significant to note too that one of the new statutes was invoked to insure extradition of Luciano. The failure of the fugitive to obtain his freedom by bribery, and the partial success of its legal reform measures evidence the progress which the State of New York is making in its effort to create laws that will protect the people as effectively as the criminal. What is even more important, these developments prove that society is not helpless against financially entrenched crime.

Letting Judgment Set the Speed

(Exchange)

Much has been said in recent months regarding the need for motor vehicle drivers to think things over before the road. Impulsiveness is held responsible for the largest portion of automobile accidents. New York's recent safety convention, however, had a different note. The doubt inserted to take advantage of the presence of a large number of automobile manufacturers.

Valuable suggestions were offered by Dean A. Paine, automotive engineer of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who pointed out, among other things, that engines have been developed to a point far in excess of the road holding, steering and braking abilities of the average machine.

But the main safety point lies in knowledge of the mechanical limitations of the automobile and driving accordingly. Any vehicle in good condition is safe when handled by a driver who knows its capabilities and limitations. There is no engineering substitute for courtesy and common sense.

DEER BREAKS ITS FEET TRYING TO ESCAPE FROM DOGS

How a buck deer broke off all its feet in a frenzied effort to escape two dogs and then died of the effects of the injuries is recited here by W. C. Kidder, Conservation officer of Osceola county.

Kidder had been summoned by a farmer, who saw the dogs chasing the deer. When the officer arrived the deer was standing outside the ice-ridge of a lake and the dogs were panting on the shore nearby.

The farmer killed one of the dogs and the deer was then brought ashore where it was found that all four feet had been broken off, probably by the ice, and that the deer had been standing on the stump of its legs. It was taken to the farmer's barn where it died.

TROUT STREAM MADE ACCESSIBLE TO FISHERMEN

The first application of a comprehensive plan to make a trout stream readily accessible to fishermen is being worked out on the Pine River near Baldwin.

In a project supported by the Department of Conservation, CCC crews have begun work on a series of ear trails leading to streamside campsites and small parking areas along the Pine river. These sites will be built on stretches of the stream which have been inaccessible due to heavy forest growth and high banks. They are expected to afford convenient stopping and resting places for fishermen.

At each site sanitary facilities and outdoor stoves will be provided.

The portion of the Pine on which the plan is being worked out is downstream from the Ne-Bo-Shone property and an easement granted or leased to the department.
