DONDERO TO HOLD COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS

Competitive civil service examinations to fill 17th Congressional District vacancies in the U. S. Military Academy at West Point and the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis will be held on Saturday, October 17th, in Detroit and other designated places, Congressman George A. Dondero announces.

Congressman Dondero has a vacancy in each of these service schools and as usual will make his nominations on the basis of competitive examination, the young men attaining the highest rating receiving the principal appointments.

Young men within the age limits prescribed for these academies may receive authorization to take these examinations by addressing a request to Congressman George A. Dondero, 527 Washington Sq., Bldg., Royal Oak, Mich. The letter of application should give the following information: (1) Full name; (2) place of legal residence; (3) month, day and year of birth; (4) height: (5) high school attended and year of graduation; and (6) preference as to service school, Annapolis or West Point.

Only young men having legal residence in the 17th Congressional District are eligible for these examinations. This means residents of Oakland County, the 22nd Ward of the City of Detroit, the Townships of Livonia, Northville, Redford and Plymouth, and the City of Plymouth.

All applications must be in before Friday, September 25th, that proper authorization may be issued prior to the examination, but it is suggested that interested young men enter their applications at once.

Early Charity Stamps

During the Civil war, charity stamps were used to raise funds to provide comforts for soldiers. After the Civil war the use of charity stamps on mail was forgotten in the United States, but the idea continued to thrive in certain European countries.

Why the Cat Stretches

When a cat wakes up, it stretches, bends, twists. The intelligent animal thus stimulates its circulation, improves the tone of its muscles and benefits its respiratory and digestive apparatus.

Rare Animal

The aye-aye is a little animal about the size of a cat, with rodent-like teeth, is nocturnal in its habits, and found only in Madagascar.

San Diego Named 60 Years Late

San Diego was discovered about 1542 by a navigator from Spain and was given its name sixty years later.

How Much Does Advertising Cost?

Not long ago, we heard a house-to-house canvasser tell a prospect: "I can sell you this gadget 25 per cent cheaper because my firm doesn't advertise."

How much does advertising actually cost?

As a customer every day in your life, you are entitled to know.

Automobiles are extensively advertised. But only 3½ per cent of the selling price of a car goes for advrtising, or about $17 on a $500 machine. Before large scale advertising, you paid $1,000 for a car not so good.

Coffee, canned foods, soft drinks, etc., have large advertising budgets. Only 5½ per cent of the selling cost, or one-half cent on a 10-cent can, is used for promotional advertising. The average retail store spends from 1 to 4 per cent on advertising. That costs you from 1 cent to 4 cents on a dollar purchase.

Is it worth your while to pay this much for the knowledge that advertising gives you? And do you think the low prices on extensively advertised products would be possible without volume production that is entirely dependent on advertising?

Newspaper advertising pays you dividends—It pays to advertise.

Hornets' Nest

By GERTRUDE ROBINSON

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

AT THE crossroads John Kay stepped down from the bus and, bag in hand, climbed the bars into the pasture. Swell of the ripe strawberries, red cows wading in the brook, the bent cedar tree at the foot of the lane behind which lay his camp—there was even the hornets' nest, hanging like a tiny little balloon from the cedar's one twisted, eastward arm.

It all made a shameful, sick feeling come up in his throat. He was a fool to have come. Then he saw that there was somebody in the hollowed-out seat in the gray boulder across the brook—somebody with a ruddy head smooth as luster ware in the sun.

Dropping his bag in the tall grass he crossed the brook on stepping stones. It was all the same, even Jane—

By the time he had reached her his speech was on the tip of his tongue: "I didn't dream of finding you here, Jane. Just run down for the week-end." Instead he stood before her, mouth foolishly open.

It was Jane who spoke, the same upward glink at the left corner of her mouth: "Why, Kay, who'd dream of it! You tearing yourself from your office, and business humming again. And I'm using your camp." She spoke regretfully. "I took your word for it, about my being free to come here, but of course—"

The same dragging slur to her vowels, the same husky, maddeningly dear catch in her low voice. Kay dropped on the grass. "I'm only here for an hour or so, to get some books I want," he continued to invent, thanking his lucky stars he had left his bag out of sight.

"We'll have tea before you go."

Kay winced at the charming hospitality of her tone. Just so would she speak to old Doctor Thorp. "You're not going abroad?" He managed a smooth casualness.

Click of knitting needles above his head. "I decided not to. Things came up."

"A man? Not that I've any business asking. If it's that asinine donkey, Wayne—" he caught his breath in a hard thread.

"You haven't, and it's not." Jane slid from the rock with a cool swish of smooth linen, draped the red silk scarf she was knitting over her shoulders and went rustling through the tall grass. "But it is a man, and I've come down here to try to decide what to do about him."

The clock on the village church tower struck four notes. An hour, and she'd be turning back to town on that confounded bus. On the way across the stream to retrieve his bag he heard Jane scream. The next moment he had turned and was pursuing a slim, gray figure, flashing past the old cedar tree. In its wake was a gray, misting, snarling cloud.

Past the juniper thicket, past the cedar tree where a red scarf hung from the swaying hornets' nest; at last he had her in his arms and was making for the mud hole by the brook. The little gray demons swarmed for a moment about his face, and then a merciful whiff of wind swept them down the meadow.

He put Jane down on the grass. There were no stings on her face or her hands, but her lips were puckered. Like a child, too proud to cry. "My feet!" she gasped.

John Kay snatched off the red sandals. On the bare ankles were angrily swelling lumps. One moment he was picking up handfuls of brown sticky clay mud and plastering it over the slim feet. The next he was peeling off his shirt, rending it in silken strips and binding the long rags over the mud plasters.

"They've stopped hurting," she said at last. "Maybe I can walk to the camp."

For answer John Kay lifted her and went trampling through the lane that led through a honeysuckle hedge to the lodge. On the threshold of the living room he hesitated. The anger that had been seething in him ever since he saw Jane on the bowlder—their bowlder where he first made love to her—boiled over. There was the fireplace, laid for lighting, the big wicker chairs, the table—set for two.

Unceremoniously he dropped Jane on the window box. "So you're having him here? That's too much, Jane." Jane had slumped, eyes closed. He felt for her pulse. It bent like a husky little engine under his hand.

"You're putting it on, Jane. What in heaven's name do you mean? If I should miss that bus—"

Five clear notes from the town clock. A shrieking of brakes down the hill, a flash of brown and red from the state highway.

Jane was sitting up. "You have. I was put up to it, though, to make you do it, you big pig-headed donkey." She began unrolling the mud bandages.

He caught Jane in one arm and with the other pulled the telephone toward him. "You knew I was coming, and you came first."

Jane's voice was muffled against his coat. "Do call Tompkins and tell him to stop those divorce papers," she said.

Pass to Viking Heaven

According to a Viking belief, no one could enter the halls of Odin, the Viking heaven, unless he had died in battle or in quest of noble adventure. To die in bed from old age or disease, says Agnes Rothery in "Sweden," was a "cow's death," and warriors who entered Valhalla with white shield unscarred in battle were to be pitied.

Dinosaur Once Had Five Toes

The older dinosaurs were five-toed. The change to three long, clawlike toes, represented by the creature, was a step in the direction of swifter movement. There was more competition in the world. The creatures, in order to survive were obliged to attack and get away faster.
