Tremendous Trifles

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"BROTHER CHARLEY"

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT had been elected President. His good friend, Theodore Roosevelt, who had picked the secretary of war for his successor, was naturally very much pleased. Also, he expected a word of thanks from the President. He got it, but it was in this form: "I owe a great deal to you, Theodore, and I want to take this opportunity of saying so. Yes, in thinking over the whole campaign, I am bound to say that I owe my election more to you than to anybody else, except my brother Charley."

In a flash the President saw forward through the next four years — to the influence of "Brother Charley" and other conservative Republicans over the new President, his departure from liberal ideas. So Theodore Roosevelt took a more and forbidding heart with him when he went to Africa to hunt lions. That brief conversation in the White House had been the first rift in a famous friendship. Affairs turned out just as Roosevelt had expected them to.

When he came back from the jungles he announced his support of Governor Hughes for the Republican nomination for President. Taft was surprised and hurt and grieved. The rift became a gulf between the two men. It resulted in the formation of the Progressive party, the defeat of Taft for re-election and a Democratic President for the next eight years.

Having gone half way in the current Lenten season, I am inclined to state that the attendance is not very commendable. Possibly there is justifiable reason for that; however, I would just like to say: That one really never knows how good or how bad a thing is until one has witnessed the object or procedure in question.

I heartily invite all of you to come and worship with us.

ADVERTISEMENTS Are Your Guides To Value

the value of a product by looking at it. More accurately, by handling and examining it. Its appearance, its texture, the "feel" and the balance of it, all mean something to their trained eyes and fingers.

But no one person can be an expert on steel, brass, wood, leather, foodstuffs, fabrics, and all of the materials that makes up a list of personal purchases. And even experts are fooled, sometimes, by concealed flaws and imperfections.

There is a surer index of value than the senses of sight and touch . . . knowledge of the maker's name and for what it stands. Here is the most certain of any manufactured goods. Here is the only guarantee against careless workmanship, or use of shoddy materials.

This is an important reason why it pays to read advertisements and to buy advertised goods. The advertised product is worthy of your confidence

Merchandise must be good or it couldn't be consistently advertised.
