State Ruling Returns Licenses To Motorists

LANSING — The job of restoring the driving privileges of more than 12,000 Michigan motorists who are unconstitutional suspended under the state's financial responsibility law has begun, it was announced by Secretary of State Richard H. Austin.

This does not include motorists who were found at fault and subsequently convicted in auto mishaps under Michigan's financial responsibility law, Austin explained.

At the same time, nearly $210,000 in security deposits required by the law will be returned to hundreds of drivers.

Austin's action followed quickly on the heels of receipt of an opinion from Attorney General Frank Kelley on the unconstitutionality of certain aspects of the Michigan financial responsibility law.

In addition to the restoration of driving privileges, Austin said the Michigan Department of State will erase from the records of more than 100,000 drivers any reference that they were suspended under the financial responsibility law.

Persons who have questions on any phase of the financial responsibility law may call Lansing for clarification, Austin said.

KELLEY'S ruling was based upon a recent United States Supreme Court decision that overturned as unconstitutional a portion of the financial responsibility law of Georgia, which is identical to the Michigan law.

Under that section of the law in both states, an uninsured motorist involved in an accident resulting in death, injury or $200 damage or more must post a security deposit equal to the estimated damages, or submit an affidavit that all claims have been settled. If this requirement is not met within 60 days after an accident, the license of the uninsured motorist is suspended.

The drivers who are to share in the $210,000 rebate met the security deposit requirement and were not suspended.

The Legislature now is considering a bill that would eliminate the reporting provision of the financial responsibility law.
