WHEREAS it has lately been discovered that certain Covert Road and Highway Taxes levied for road improvements in the Township of Farmington, for the years 1926 to 1931, both inclusive, have been assessed against the City of Farmington at large and levied on said assessment has been made against taxable property in the City of Farmington at large over said period of time, and collection of said taxes has been undertaken and in most instances made;

AND WHEREAS the City Commission is informed that said assessments, levies and collections were illegally made and were not a proper tax charge against property in the City of Farmington, and should be recovered by the City of Farmington in behalf of its tax payers;

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED that Mayor and Finance Committee are authorized to take immediate steps to recover the amount of said illegal taxes against the proper municipalities, wherever said taxes were levied, and, for the purpose of recovering the same, and setting aside the tax liens created by said assessments and levies, to employ legal counsel to institute such action in the name of the City of Farmington, as shall be necessary and proper.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that an examination of all assessment and tax records pertaining to said illegal taxes shall be made or caused to be made for the purpose of determining the exact amount of such illegal taxes paid.

SCHOOLS WERE CLOSED BUT PUPILS STUDIED

Children Got Lessons by Press, Radio, and Telephone During Epidemic in Chicago

When prevalence of infantile paralysis prompted the Chicago Board of Education to delay opening of the city's public schools last Fall, there arose the problem of how to minimize the educational loss of the 450,000 pupils while the school buildings remained closed. The newspapers, radio and telephone all helped to meet the problem.

Organized Telephone Staff

Through the newspapers, School Superintendent William H. Johnson urged parents to see that their children studied at home until such time as the authorities considered it safe to permit children to gather in class rooms.

He organized a group of teacher-advisers to handle inquiries by telephone from parents as to what ground home-supervised studies should cover. These teacher-advisers represented each of the eight elementary grades, and when parents called the Board of Education offices, they were connected with one of the advisers, who offered helpful suggestions as to what subjects their children should study, and how the parents should guide them. High school students were told to review their previous year's work.

Work Out Comprehensive Plan

The teacher-adviser group began to function on September 8, two days after the scheduled opening of classes. Several thousand telephoned inquiries were handled by this group during the few days following.

On September 13 school authorities placed into effect a more comprehensive plan for meeting the situation. This plan utilized the press, radio and telephone. A group of principals began daily radio lecture programs from six of the city's broadcasting stations, for pupils in the third to eighth grades. Newspapers published the daily lecture schedules, including time, station, grade and subject.

Receive 1,000 Calls a Day

A staff of 21 teachers was maintained at the school board offices to answer questions received by telephone from parents, regarding the radio programs and home studies.

Many parents telephoned for specific information on portions of radio lectures that were missed by their children during the broadcasts. Others called in with helpful criticisms and suggestions that were welcomed by the school authorities in their efforts to make this unique educational experiment as valuable and effective as possible.

During the period of the broadcasts, the staff at the school board headquarters handled an average of about 1,000 calls a day from parents.
