The Green Thumb
By GEORGE ABRAHAM

Summer care of iris: Iris is one of the backbone perennials which gives us a good show with not too much care. This thankful flower is one of the oldest cultivated plants, appearing in ancient frescoes nearly 4,000 years old. It was brought from Syria to Egypt where it developed religious significance. To the ancient Greeks the flower was the personification of the rainbow goddess, Iris, from which the name has come. Theirs was not the common German or bearded iris found in most gardens today.

Garden iris grows from root stems known as rhizomes, which have a habit of growing rapidly and so thickly that if they aren't dug up, divided and replanted every three or four years, the blooms deteriorate and get smaller and smaller. Dividing can be done any time from July to early September.

While iris likes poor soil, it also does a lot better if you take the time to work in some fertilizer. Any balanced type such as 9-0-5, at the rate of three pounds per 100 sq. ft. of bed, can be used, or you can drench the roots with a liquid plant food such as 23-19-17 at planting time.

Take a spade and lift up the old mother plants, then divide the roots or rhizomes, so there's one to three growing points per segment. Cut out old, rotten material and discard it.

NOTE: If the roots have a soft rot and give off a foul odor, that's a sign of bacterial soft rot. Cut out any affected portions. Soak the rest of the rhizomes in a solution of streptomycin (Agrimycin) before planting to clean up this bacterial disease. It's also a good idea to dust the clumps with Sevin insecticide.

Next step, cut back each fan of leaves to about 1/3 of their original height. A final word, plant the roots so they run parallel to the ground, and just barely covered with soil. Do NOT apply peatmoss or other mulch material on or around iris as it causes them to rot.

GREEN THUMB CLINIC:
"We have seven fuchsia plants growing outdoors now. Please tell us what care they need as we want to bring them inside in winter."

Answer: Spray foliage with malathion to keep fly (white fly) down. Also water the plants regularly. When fall comes, your best bet is to take tip cuttings and make new plants. Old mother plants tend to become woody when carried over, and this is why we recommend starting new plants from tip cuttings rooted in water.

Combination Door Beautifies Entry

Selecting a dramatic-looking front door doesn't make much sense if you're going to cover it with clumsy, unattractive storm sash.

A much better idea is to duplicate its beauty with a wood combination storm-and-screen door.

These modern combination doors of ponderosa pine are especially designed in a variety of colonial and contemporary styles to blend with wood panel entry doors.

They are permanently installed and have interchangeable panels of glass and screen that are simply switched with the seasons — much easier than removing heavy storm doors and hanging and maintaining screens.

Because of their good looks, and the fact that they "match" the front door, wood combination doors become an integral part of the overall home decor.

They suit all architectural styles.

Precision-manufactured for good fit and easy installation, the combination doors are preservative treated against weather abuse, and can be painted, stained or varnished to suit.

They're available in stock sizes at local lumber dealers and building supply centers.

Because wood is a natural insulator and an extremely low conductor of heat, panel doors of ponderosa pine are a wise choice for good home insulation.

Ponderosa pine combination storm-and-screen doors are used extensively in electrically-heated homes where full thermal insulation is a construction requirement.

Bathroom Ceiling Won't Peel

If the heat and humidity in your bathroom raises havoc with the paint on the ceiling, try a different approach.

Many homeowners have installed prefinished ceiling block right over their old ceiling, eliminating periodic painting.

Tongue- and -grooved Marlite blocks are easy to install. Complete installation instructions are included with each carton of this quarter-inch thick paneling.

The polar white blocks have a satin finish. Harmonizing moldings are available with this plastic-finished hard-board at local building material dealers.

These ceiling blocks can be used effectively with four-foot panels or 16" x 8" planks, which come in a wide variety.
