Local Churches Have
Christmas Programs

conducted after the manner of a country school 50 or 100 years ago. Gifts will be presented then for the Baptist's Children's Home.

These may be food or clothing as well as money, Rev. Miles says.
Christmas Eve at Salem Evangelical Church there will be a Sunday school program under the direction of Miss Emma Gildemeister. It will be the old-fashioned type of entertainment with recitations and Christmas carols. The junior choir will sing and Mrs. Gladys McVeagh will sing a solo.

Christmas day there will be the regular Sunday service at 10 a. m. and Rev. Carl Schultz will preach a Christmas sermon.

Church school will hold a party Friday night at Methodist Episcopal Church. It will begin at 7:30 and there will be singing and a variety of entertainment. On Saturday night, the Epworth League will take to the streets and do some carolling. They will offer their music at houses which display candles in the windows. After singing, the League will hold a social meeting.

Music will play a large part in the 10:30 a. m. service Sunday. Carols and hymns will be sung by the junior and senior choirs and Rev. Delmer Stubbs will preach a Christmas sermon.

Miss Zela M. Nichols of West Farmington was married Saturday night to Roy L. Buchanan of 2245 Sherwood, Farmington. They were married by Justice John J. Schultz, Jr.

Terrier Gets His Name

From Latin Word 'Terra'
Terriers get their name from the Latin "terra," denoting the type of dog that "goes to earth," or in plain American dog talk, "heards the quarry in its underground lair," observes Edwin McK. Johnson in the Chicago Daily News.

The breeds included in this variety group follow: Airedale, bedlington, bull terrier, cairn, dandie dinnmont, fox terrier (smooth and wire-haired), Irish, Kerry blue, lakeland, llhasas, Manchester, schnauzer (miniature and standard), scottish, sealyham, skye, staffordshire, welsh and west highland white.

The fox terrier, probably best known of all is used on the fox hunt, when the fox goes underground. The fox terrier is usually carried by one of the hunt riders in a "knapsack" and goes into action when the larger hounds corner the quarry. There are two types of fox terrier, the smooth coat and the wire coated, both being alike structurally. The wire coat, which appears on welsh, Irish, Airedale, scottish and others, is considered the perfect coat.

The smooth-coated terriers include the popular bull terrier and its cousin the staffordshire. Both are aggressive and courageous and with their well set-up bodies and power make fine protectors.

The Manchester terrier is one of the oldest varieties, being like most others from the original old English black and tan terrier stock.

The dandie dinnmont, roughly, has the appearance of the cairn, but is longer and lower in body. A mass of hair on the face identifies the low-hung skye terrier.

The Irish is one of the gentlest of the terrier family, having been used for such unbelievable work as lion hunting. The Kerry blue runs this breed a close second for courage.

There are other terriers, better or less known, like border terriers and llhasas.

Lakelands, like borders, take their name from localities and districts of England, as do Airedales (Aire valley), Kerry (Kerry county) and staffordshires.

Snowy Owl Resident of Both Old World and New

The snowy owl is something of a fisherman, as well as a mighty hunter. It has two methods of catching fish. One of them is to fly along just above the surface of the water until it locates a fish, whereupon it reaches in and grabs it with one claw. The other method is to lie in wait on some rock, or perhaps a piece of ice, until the moment comes to strike. Although nocturnal, the scientific name of the snowy owl, is a word taken from the Greek nykteus, which means nocturnal, the owner of the name does not confine itself to the hours of darkness for hunting, but is quite active in broad daylight, relates a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The snowy owl is a resident of both the Old World and the New, living in the northern sections of both. For a nest it usually scrapes a hole in the soil on a ledge of rock or some other spot that is somewhat higher than the surrounding country. While it is usually wary and shy, both the father and the mother bird will unhesitatingly attack a man if he comes close to their nest while there are eggs or young owls in it.

Were it not for the fact that its head is almost perfectly round, giving it rather a comical appearance, the snowy owl would have to be rated as our most beautiful owl. It is a big fellow, attaining an average length of about 23 inches, the female being slightly larger than her mate. The normal color of this bird is white, with a larger or smaller number of narrow horizontal bands of black all over the body.

Wives Were 'Property'
Wedding rings owe their origin to the days when men owned their wives and treated them as slaves! It was the pagan custom to place a ring on the bride's finger as a symbol of possession—a reminder that the wife was the husband's property. The earliest existing rings, says London Answers magazine, are those found in the tombs of ancient Egypt, but probably rings have been worn from the very earliest of times. (Their use obtained the sanction of the church during the Eleventh century. As to why wedding rings and engagement rings are worn on the third finger of the left hand, there is a popular belief that a nerve in this finger communicates with the heart.)
