REVISED PHONE TOLL RATES ARE TOLD

bor, Mt. Clemens Ypsilanti, Monroe and Pontiac.

1. Provide optional flat-rate residential rates in suburban exchanges which permit unlimited calls, without any toll charges, to all adjacent exchange districts. Under the flat rate options, toll charges will be 20 per cent less when calls are made to exchanges which are not contiguous or adjacent. For example, between here and Pontiac.

To avoid confusion, it is mentioned that there are rates which the order does not affect in any way.

Unaffected is the cost of calling from the City Hall area in Detroit to Farmington. Farmington is the most distant community in a northwest direction from Detroit, to be included in the new system.

Objections against the present system of levying tolls have been particularly numerous in respect to calls to Redford. Under the new system, Redford will be an adjacent zone, so the rate will be only five cents.

When it comes to toll charges to Ann Arbor, Monroe or some other point in the 10-mile radius the charge will depend on where the call originates.

At the present these toll charges are computed on the distance from the Detroit Federal Building to the point called. Under the new system, each of the seven Detroit zones will have its own toll rate center, and the cost will be computed on the cost from that center.

Exact Data Lacking

Exact data on costs of these toll services has not yet been obtained, and involves measuring the distances from the new toll centers. The optional flat rate services provided in the new order will enable subscribers to further lower their 'phone bills. In Farmington at the present, a single line residence subscriber pays $1.75 a month for the privilege of being able to call any of the almost 1,000 other subscribers here. If he calls outside of Farmington tolls are charged, with 10 cents the minimum charge.

Under the new plan, he may pay slightly more (probably $1 more) as a flat rate and have unlimited calls in Farmington and also to all adjacent units. Adjacent units are Redford, Livonia, Southfield, and Birmingham.

In addition, the Farmington subscriber would pay 4 cents toll instead of 5 cents per unit outside of the flat rate area. A call to Redford, thus, would cost him 4 cents toll.

For business establishments the flat-rate options are different. The flat rates do not permit unlimited calls, without toll, to adjacent zones or exchanges, but do reduce the toll rate by 20 per cent—or from 5 cents a unit to 4 cents.

Farmington has been taken as an example. The same flat-rate principle will be followed in the other suburbs. Flat-rate options also effect Detroit subscribers.

Liverpool Was Founded In Thirteenth Century

Geography has played an unmistakable part in shaping Liverpool's destiny. The city is situated only three miles from the Irish sea on the north bank of the tidal Mersey river, which ranges in width from one mile to three miles, and extends inland far enough to provide safe anchorage for thousands of ships.

King John founded the town early in the Thirteenth century, but it developed slowly until America was discovered. Liverpool engaged in the slave traffic, and its bold seafarers also played an active part in the romantic days of smuggling rum, sugar and tobacco. But the port's real prosperity dates from 1840, when Samuel Cunard inaugurated regular steamship service between the Old World and the New.

One of Liverpool's principal "articles of export" to America, until the time of the World war, was immigrants. It was a pioneer port of English emigration, and in addition, many emigrants from Spain, France, Russia, Poland and the Baltic region bound for America embarked there.

How to Improve Democracy Is Told by Readers

In this world of militantly conflicting political theories, one question frequently confronting us is, How can we improve democracy and assure ourselves of its continuation in this country? The Christian Science Monitor decided to put this question to its readers and give prizes to those writing the best answers.

Printed below are some of the answers which it recognized as having merit.

"A clearer understanding of what democracy is and how it is maintained is the great need. Education is the answer. Education can instill in present and future generations the love and understanding of freedom. There should be courses in democracy. Self-government, recognition of individual rights, loyalty to the highest interests of all, respect for law and obedience to authority, liberty and the vigilance which insures it—these should all be taught in the schools. Supplementing the education of the young, adult citizens should bring more democracy into practice in the organizations of business, commerce, manufacturing, and labor. To have more and safer democracy in government we must have more of it in business and private life."

Robert S. Van Atta
Rochester, N. Y.

"A better democracy requires these things of its citizens:

WORK. Working as hard for the success of humanitarian aims and the safeguarding of free institutions as the regimented totalitarians slave for their drivers.

FACING OF FACTS. Knowing the defects of system or of application so as to correct them, and knowing the good aspects so as to appreciate, strengthen and advertise them. Knowing where authoritarian systems threaten the rights or safety of any nation truly devoted to democracy, and knowing not only what must be done about it, but that it must be done full force and now.

DEVOTION. Willingness to suffer if need be for a good cause. Willingness to pay the price for the preservation and progress of right things. Being moved to go as far for love of good as dictator-driven people go for fear of evil.

SPIRITUAL UNDERSTANDING. Realization that final victory rests with the right to be gained only by edurateous adherence to and protection of good."

Lee Dare Young
Ann Arbor, Mich.

First in importance is an adequate conception of just what democracy is. The democratic principle means that the majority has the right to govern, and the minority the right to criticize and oppose the majority. Moreover, the liberty of the majority is limited by the right of the minority to dissent from the majority.

An informed citizenship is necessary to a democracy. A free press, a free pulpit, and a free forum, are fundamental in a democracy. In order to progress a democracy requires a quickened conscience as to social, racial, and economic justice.

A democracy cannot remain static. Recall Wendell Phillips' fine epigram: If the Alps, piled in cold and silence, be the emblem of despotism, we joyfully take the ever-restless ocean for ours—only pure because never still.

Edgar DeWitt Jones, D. D
Detroit, Mich.

"Democracy will become more efficient by increasing the faith of the man in the street in it. Democratic rights and freedom are imbedded in our constitutional and legal systems of laws, which need to be popularized with the masses in an educational campaign. The first six amendments of our constitution, the Bill of Rights, should be as familiar to the man in the street as the rules of baseball. Trial by jury is popularly known but other legal rights are the prerogative writs—Habeas Corpus, Certiori, Injunction, Mandamus and Prohibition and many others. Articles on each of them, full of illustrations, should be published; so that the man in the street, as he reads the daily newspaper on court news and legal cases, will readily perceive how democracy protects his rights. Once he intelligently grasps that democracy establishes a reign and rule of law (that makes it impossible for any government official, politician, police, soldier, party, institution, or any organization to transgress or trespass on his individual freedom within the law), he will militantly defend and work in a common cause to make democracy more efficient."
