HONEY IN BAKING PREVENTS DRYING, EXPERT DECLARES

Bakeries utilizing honey in food products can well be copied by those turning out cakes and other baked goods at home, suggests the beekeeping specialist, R. H. Kelly, at Michigan State College.

For the honey not only is healthful, but keeps baked products from drying out too rapidly. Kelly is aiding beekeepers in the State in their program of merchandising the product of hives of honey produced annually in Michigan.

Honey takes up moisture rapidly, and holds it, so fruit cakes, steamed puddings, cookies, and candies made with it stay moist a long time. But confections and frostings made with honey will remain undeniably soft and sticky and take up more moisture if the air is humid.

A cook can substitute honey for sugar in a cake recipe but because of the moisture in the honey, less liquid is needed. The amount that the liquid must be reduced depends on the kind of honey—medium, thick, or thin, and on the proportion of honey substituted for sugar.

When medium-thick honey is substituted for half of the sugar in a recipe, reduce the liquid one-fourth. If honey is substituted for all the sugar, reduce the liquid one-half.

Honey may be used in gingerbread, brown breads, and steamed puddings. It has much the same consistency as molasses and may be used in place of it, measure for measure. But honey contains less acid than molasses, so leave out the soda if it is called for and increase the quantity of baking powder. For each quarter teaspoon of soda omitted, add 1 teaspoon of baking powder.

Other suggestions follow: Use the usual method in the recipe, including time and temperature of baking.
