AN OPEN LETTER to the VOTERS IN FARMINGTON

Ladies and Gentlemen:

One of the grandest priveleges afforded the American Citizen may be, and should be, exercised by each of us April 3, next,—the right to vote.

Newspaper accounts of happenings in other countries give some idea of the worth of American citizenship.

The writer was privileged to have been elected and is acting as one of the Justices for Farmington, and is again a candidate next Monday. There are three other good men seeking this office, all esteemed friends of mine. One has held a responsible office in the County and has been an honored citizen of Farmington for many decades. He has seen many interesting elections, from the time of the election of President Lincoln till now. A second is a successful lawyer practicing in Detroit, living in Farmington. If you are not acquainted with him and his family you should make it a point to meet them. The third is an artisan who is well known and well liked by his circle of friends. In my youth he "dolled" me up many a time to go "calling." He was then and is now a master of his craft.

It is perhaps natural that one thinks his qualifications are a "wee" bit better than those of the other candidates. I've a college degree, am a tax payer, belong to most of the clubs and organizations that others do, raised our family in Farmington and some kind friends say I've made a pretty fair "J. P." But you decide whether these are good enough.

However, the point to be stressed is that you do vote Monday, not for whom you vote. You should be jealous of this right, guard it, use it; then on election eve literally get down on your knees and thank God that you live in a country where, when a successful candidate takes office and stretches forth his hand to perform his duties, no invading iron-shod-boot will crush it and replace your elected candidate by an appointed conqueror.

Sincerely yours,

Lloyd S. Gullen,
Justice of the Peace.

Lavender Lining

LOU EM shook out the fur coat almost savagely. So this was the end of her dreams of comfort. A punishment, some would say, for her ever thinking of a little home in the country, all her own, and fat little checks coming in every month to keep the home fire burning. As if she wished harm to old Aunt Louise Emeline. But dreams and wishes were done now. Charities had received aunt's money, and to Lou Em had come some boxes of ancient clothing. The coat among them. No doubt the executors thought it too frail to be worth anything, or they may have thought it was but another cracked silk dress, as it lay in a trunk with its lavender lining outermost.

"It's not really worn. She must have had it made just before that accident that kept her bedridden afterward. But how old-fashioned! Look at those huge sleeves! Enough to make two coats. And that's an idea—"

Lou Em's pale cheeks flushed as she pulled out the sleeves and straightened the collar of the rich garment.

"Genuine mink, for aunt would scorn imitation. And with my hair—" She held a sleeve up against her face. "I am not so ugly after all, with something beautiful on me. I'll just try that plan I thought of; I can only be laughed at, and maybe it'll work."

Swiftly she bundled the coat into the box in which her marked-down suit had come, and, leaving the old silk and cloth frocks of her legacy on the floor, hurried down the boarding house stairs. Saturday afternoon was not a good time for her experiment, but business girls cannot choose times.

The splendor of the new furrier's in the new building on the avenue of fashionable shops almost daunted Lou Em, but she would not give up, now that she was started.

"I have here a coat—" she stammered to the attendant.

"For the remodel, yes? See Mr. Moon."

Mr. Moon proved to be a young man with the most wonderful eyes and manners that Lou Em had ever approved of.

"How much will it cost?" she asked anxiously, trying to hide her foot with its cracked shoe. "Not too much, and could I—?"

"New lining, of course. Something neat in beige. And recut to fit you. Something smart. Say, a $150."

"Dollars?" inquired Lou Em faintly. He might as well have said kingdoms. She had as many as she had dollars.

"But the extra fur. There's a lot of that. Look how long and full the coat is, and those sleeves—couldn't you—that is—surely it's worth something, that fur."

Young Mr. Moon raised his eyebrows, and then he took a good look at Lou Em. He saw the cracked shoe and the too-much washed crepe blouse and the last year's hat. He saw something else, too, for Mr. Moon was really an observing as well as a good young man.

"Most unusual, Miss—Henly, was it? But I'll ask the boss. He's in, I think. Can't promise, though."

Lou Em sat in the pale-gray reception room then and prayed for the five minutes that seemed five hours until Mr. Moon returned, followed by a human volcano, carrying the mink coat.

Mr. Schonbrunn of Schonbrunn Furs, Inc., was not ordinarily an excitable man, but now he appeared to be one huge sputter.

"You get this, where? This—this —I myself make this complete, the first work I do when I finish the apprentice. The lining, how I fought the old lady about that. But she beat, and for doing as she said I got $50 extra.

"Ah, ah—the good old days when I was a young feller, them was. It makes me cry—"

Mr. Schonbrunn's eyes indeed were tearful.

"You want a coat? I'll make you a coat of good mink, a grand coat, lining the best I got, but this coat I don't cut. No. This coat hangs in my office in a glass case, as long as I got it an office. You know why? That $50 started me up. I traded a bit in small skins till I could leave the boss and start for myself. I come here—now look!" Mr. Schonbrunn waved a prideful hand about the pale-gray salon, with its one priceless sable scarf on display.

"The lavender lining that made my fortune—" He stroked the silk caressingly. "Yes, you take the order, Moon. A mink coat of the best for the young lady. And you see to it person'lly. See that she's suited."

Mr. Moon would do that. Certainly he would. And there was much to talk about, Aunt Louise Emeline and the charities that probably needed her money, and Mr. Schonbrunn and his romantic streak, so that Mr. Moon came the next evening to Lou Em's boarding house parlor. And kept coming and taking her out to get the good of the new coat.

He really was such an understanding young man that when his salary was raised Lou Em consented to give up the boarding house and as Mrs. Moon live in the dearest little flat where the new mink coat would be more at home.

At The Redford Theatre

Bing Crosby becomes an American millionaire in his latest picture showing at the Redford Friday through Monday. As the name "Paris Honeymoon" suggests, the picture is full of glamour and excitement. Bing gets chased around by a countess, Shirley Ross, and Manya, a native girl who has plenty on the ball, played by Franciska Gaal, who was so effective as the Chinese girl in "Marco Polo."

Besides love and adventure, the picture offers several swell song hits. Among them are, "You're a Sweet Little Headache," "I Have Eyes," "Those Funny Old Hills," and "Joobalai."

Sharing the Redford screen for the same stay is an adventure picture pure and simple: "Heart of the North." It is from the novel by William B. Mowrey. The subject of the picture is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The action takes place in the spectacular Canadian Rockies, which are made all the more spectacular by the fact that they are shown in Technicolor in "The Heart of the North."

As if these two attractions were not enough, the Redford is offering something else to its patrons. Every Thursday night there will be a "Jitterbug Dance Contest." All jitterbugs are invited to enter and cut the rug, and not just for the fun of it either, for cash prizes will be awarded the winners, according to the management.

Exchange Roots, Seeds At Garden Club Meeting

Roots and seeds will be exchanged by members of the Farmington Garden Club at their meeting Tuesday, April 4, indicating that spring is not so far off.

The club, a branch of the National Farm and Garden Association, will met at the home of Mrs. Lloyd Gullen, 23700 Wanrrner. All members are urged to attend the meeting.

COW MAKES RECORD

A new record, exceeding the average of the Guernsey breed for her age and class has just been completed by a three-year-old cow, Polly of Sepascot, 424866, of Farmington, tested and owned by Charles E. Sorenson. Her official record supervised by the Michigan State College and announced by The American Guernsey Cattle Club is 12310.1 pounds of milk and 645.8 pounds of butter fat in Class E.
