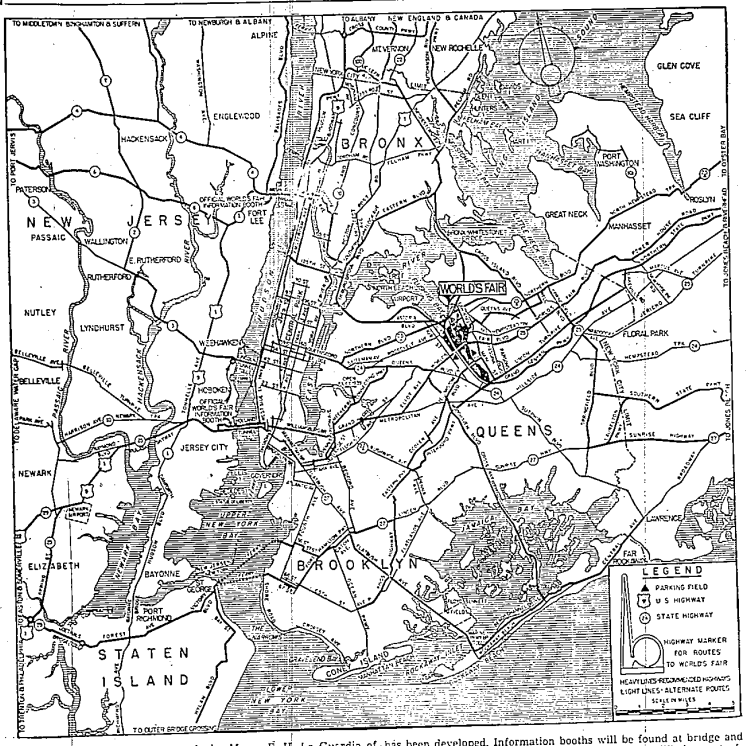
Official Routes to The New York World's Fair



NEW YORK—Approved recently by Mayor F. H. La Guardia of New York City and Grover A. Whalen, President of the New York World's Fair, this map is designed to be of especial use to those motoring to the exposition. A comprehensive system of handling Fair traffic has been developed. Information booths will be found at bridge and tunnel approaches to New York. According to Mr. Whalen, out-of-town motorists will be able to thread their way through the city to the Fair grounds "as easily as they now go from home down to Main Street."

Job Seekers Should Get Security Card

Persons who plan to seek employment in construction and other lines which hire new workers in the spring and summer seasons should obtain social security numbers before looking for jobs. This advice was given this week by the Social Security field office in Pontiac.

Many employers now demand that new workers produce social security numbers before going to work.

It is usually more convenient for a worker to get his number before applying for a job than it is for him to return to the field office for this purpose.

They suggest that every one who takes a new job present his social security number to his employer, as the latter must report this number when he pays the taxes which are imposed under the old age insurance system. Even where workers are employed for only a few days, as is often the case in construction and other lines, the number should be given to the employer, to make sure the worker receives full credit for deductions made from his pay under the old age insurance plan.

NATIONAL DEEENSE NEEDS OUTLINED BY LEGIONNAIRE

Edward Karow, national defense chairman of the 17th district of the American Legion submits the following article entitled: "Peace Through National Defense."

The defense policy advocated by the American Legion was not borne of hysteria created by the rise to power of dictators. On the contrary, it was stated 20 years ago, by our founders. When we came out of the World War, the need to share our experiences, the desire to perpetuate America as a great symbol of liberty, led us to a calm appraisal of the defense needs of our country.

That appraisal was expressed in the National Defense Act of 1920. With slight modification to meet the demands of developing technique, our plan has stood the test of the years. Though it was advanced as a minimum statement of our needs, it is only recently that the cry of the American Legion has been heeded. It is only now, when free nations are in peril, that the national consciousness has accepted it as a blueprint for an adequate national defense. It is only now that America builds towards that plan as one suiting our national purposes.

Twenty years ago America had cause to be thankful that a deadly struggle with un-American foes had been successfully concluded. Her forces had made a great contribution towards defeating ambitions that would have been repellent to American conceptions of liberty. The success of that adventure was so great that, for the moment, we were proud in the belief that we had shared as victors in the war that would end all wars.

Holding the belief that this was a successful war to make democracy safe not alone for America, but for all the world, we proceeded to dismantle our defense forces. The military machine that had been forged in the World War was consigned to the scrap heap. Our Army was reduced to the status of a force hardly suitable for our police needs.

In the succeeding years and as a further evidence in our faith in the victories that had come to the democracies of the world, a large part of our Navy was scrapped. Naval supremacy was sacrificed. In the efforts to secure peace through negotiations we sank battleships while naval airplane powers scuttled blueprints.

At no time in our national history was there fuller compliance with the traditional American view that the military establishment should be wholly subordinate to the civilian authorities—the idea that the State department is the first line of defense. For 12 years there was no major naval construction and in the land forces there was an accompanying lack of zeal for the maintainance of our land forces.

Through all these years, The American Legion maintained the position it had established originally. The National Defense Act of 1920 remained as our goal. This Act called for 280,000 enlisted men, and a National Guard of 425,000 with proper complements of officer personnel, and the equipment to support them in the field.

But even that modest establishment is far greater than the force that The American Legion has requested down through the years.

For 1939, despite the huge armaments of other nations, we ask for a modest Regular Army of 15,000 enlisted men. We ask for a National Guard of 210,000. We ask that the recommendations of the Baker Board for our air armada shall be superseded so that we shall eventually have an air force of 8,000 serviceable planes.

Our request is predicted on the graphic phrase that a second best Navy is like a second best poker hand. The second best Navy, like the second best poker hand, is of no value when the bluffing stage is over.

In modern naval history, Germany is the outstanding example of a nation with a second best Navy. At the time of the World War she had expended hundreds of millions of dollars to build her Navy, but it was still inferior to the needs of the World War, and so the second best Navy failed of its purpose.

We ask for a merchant marine that can be relied upon to act as a line of supply to our land and sea forces in whatever theater of operations they may be engaged.

To supplement these forces, we ask for suitable appropriations to provide for training, for maneuvers, and for maintainance of reserve of trained civilians who may be called to the defense of our country whenever an honorable peace cannot be maintained.

To starve the military and naval establishments in times of peace is to make a notice offering the declaration that the inefficient present will be supplanted by the despotic future.

An adequate defense costs little more than the war debt that was so large chiefly because we were unprepared in the last war. Guided by the thought that we seek the proper defense for democracy, as an article of faith that has always had to do battle, The American Legion will not rest until its program is successfully accomplished.

DETROIT TO HAVE NEW SYSTEM OF ISSUING PLATES

A new system of license plate distribution in the Detroit area which he believes will save nearly one hundred thousand dollars in a twelve month period has been introduced by Secretary of State Harry F. Kelly.

Kelly placed 12 Detroit branch offices on a salary basis instead of fees on February 1 and on March 15 issued figures showing a saving of nearly $27,000 over the same period in 1938. "This change in policy will be confined to the Detroit area only," Kelly said. "There a survey disclosed branch office managers being paid as high as $9,000 in the rush period in February. We are now paying salaries to managers of these branches and I believe the public will welcome this huge saving."

On March 1, Kelly closed four Detroit branches completely and said that all others except the main office on Cass avenue would eventually be closed and a new system of distribution soon announced that will serve the public better than ever in the past.

An innovation in the issuance of license plates will be inaugurated in Detroit in August, when the second half of 1939 plates are issued. Kelly said arrangements had been made with the Detroit Board of Education to issue plates from 20 or 30 public schools, enough of them so that no person will have to go farther than two miles from his home to secure his plates.
