HAPPY BIRTHDAY!

By STANLEY J. FORREST
(Released by McClure Syndicate.)
W.D. Service.

THE marks of her tears had left damp places on the arm of the big chair in the library—his chair. And now she lay face down on the bed, her head buried in the pillow, the two rumpled telegrams clutched in her small fist. Both had been sent to Phillip, her husband, and both were from Bert. The first read:

"Lady in Black not your type stop. Forget her stop Details tomorrow." and the second, dated a few days later:

"Love and kisses to Chorus Girl. You lucky hound stop Hope Gertie forgives and forgets."

It would have to be Phillip. Their very best friend, no Phil. Theirs certainly not hers. If only he hadn't asked her to send that gray suit to the cleaner. Or if she had neglected just this once to go through the pockets. But she hadn't forgotten.

She swallowed hard, blinked through her tears and by the time her mother reached the room, was sitting on the edge of the bed blowing her nose.

Sometimes she wished her mother would keep her opinions to herself. She wished, too—

"I can't for the life of me see why you waste tears over him. I've always said—

"Goodness knows, Gertie, I've told you often enough—"

"O, hush up—do you hear? Hush up! Tell me! That's all you ever do. From now on I won't believe anybody, n-no matter what they say. Ohhhhh!"

Again she threw herself on the bed and buried her blonde head in her husband's pillow.

What a grand and glorious thing it was to discover on your birthday, of all days in the year, that your husband had apparently been keeping company with chorus girls and ladies in black. Black what—bathing suit, negligee . . . ?

"Lo, funny-face. Phillip talking—remember me?"

"Yes, I'm afraid I do." That was telling him.

"Ouch. Listen, Hon."

"Well?"

devil when you found out what she cost. And lug—hello—HELLO—Gertie had replaced the receiver and was now grinning at Mama Byers who had come back and was standing open-mouthed in the doorway.

"I'm sure I don't understand. Aren't you going to insist upon an explanation?"

"No need to, Mother dear. You see, Phil always tells me everything—in time."

Then, as her daughter dashed for the hall closet, "May I ask where you're going?"

"Sure. Phil wants me to come down and meet his lady friend—you know—the Chorus Girl."

"Gertie!"

"Aspirins in the top drawer, Mom. And don't wait up for us, will you?"

"Well, if anybody asked me—"

But there was nobody home to ask Mama Byers anything.

Disprove Old Theory of Black Void Between Stars

The old notion that the dark regions between the stars are just black void has been offered disproved by the studies which have been made at Mount Wilson by Dr. Joel B. Stebbins and his assistant, Dr. A. W. Whitford.

The gas and dust in interstellar space there is some gas and dust invisible to the telescope but detectable by means of the spectroscopic, which, by splitting light into its constituent colors, enables the physicist to identify the matter with which it may be dusted.

The gas and dust in interstellar space manifest themselves by absorption lines in the spectra of distant stars. When starlight passes through this dust or gas some of the light is absorbed. The amount in general varies with the color. So, by noting what colors are blotted out the physicist determines just what elements have done the absorbing.

Another test is the reddening of starlight as it passes through gas or dust. Just as the sun looks redder at the horizon because its light must pass through a thick earthly haze so stars appear redder than they actually are whenever their light passes through a similar haze in space.

From measurements of the colors of stars with the photo-electric cell the amount of reddening and hence the amount of dust can be computed.

In the Milky Way are star clouds, shapeless blurs of light. Formerly these were regarded as aggregations of stars that could not be resolved by powerful telescopes. Drs. Stebbins and Whitford now find that the apparently dark spaces between bright star clouds are actually regions of increased absorption.

What astronomers once regarded as unresolvable masses of clouds are simply stars veiled by dark material in front. It is the same kind of veiling that occurs when we hold up a piece of ground glass against a bright light at a distance. We lose all sense of a bright, concentrated source of light.

Highest Bridge

In addition to being the longest line operated by any railroad in the United States, Southern Pacific has the highest railway bridge in this country.

Known as the Pecos River bridge, the lofty structure is 328 feet high and 1,815 feet long. As originally constructed in 1892, to reduce existing grades and shorten the line, the bridge was 2,189 feet long. But in 1910, because of increased traffic, the span was shortened and heavily re-enforced. The total cost was approximately $380,000.

For the PRICE of a good cigar

It was Kipling who quipped, "A woman is only a woman; but a good cigar is a smoke." With none of the fear and trembling that should attend an extension of that master's words, we would like to say that for the same price as a good smoke you can purchase a panoramic view of the life in this community.

How else but through the columns of 'The Enterprise' will you obtain accurate information on such subjects as the City and Township government; the State and national government as they affect the local scene through the WPA, PWA and such agencies; the school system; social and fraternal affairs here, and last, but not of least importance, the values being offered by your local merchants? A cigar is only a good smoke, but 'The Enterprise' is a carefully conducted trip behind scenes at Farmington.
